FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

OF THE

Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company.

THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD

THE IMPORTANCE OF THIS ROAD AS A

AND OHIO RAILROAD to the Ohio River offers the most guarantee of its successful value, and

Should be the Most Important and Substantial Railroad Enterprise now in Progress in this Country.

Its capacity to an East and West route, and the promoter of an immense and profitable trade awaiting its completion, have drawn to it the attention and co-operation of prominent capitalists and railroad men of this City, of sound judgment and known integrity, whose connection with it, together with that of leading business men of Virginia and West Virginia, indorse its strength, feasibility and ensure its speedy completion.

The Road is completed and in operation from Richmond to the celebrated White Sulphur Springs of West Virginia, 237 miles, and there remain but 200 miles (now partially constructed) to be completed, to carry it to the proposed terminus on the Ohio River, at or near the mouth of the Big Sandy River, 100 miles above Cincinnati and 80 miles below Pittsburg.

(Lines are now projected or in progress through Ohio and Kentucky to this point, which will connect the Chesapeake and Ohio with the Western Railroad Systems of the West and Southwest, and with the Pacific Railroad.

The valuable franchise and superior advantages will place the CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY among the richest and most powerful and trustworthy corporations of the country;

And there Exists a Present Value, in Completed Road and Work Done, (Equal to the Entire Amount of the Mortgage.

The details of the Loan have been arranged with special reference of the wants of all classes of investors, and combine the various features of convenience, safety and protection against loss or fraud.

The Bonds are in denominations of $1,000, $500 and $100.

They will be issued as Coupon Bonds, payable to bearer, unless to be held in their form; or

The Bond may be registered in the name of the owner, with the coupons remaining payable to bearer attached, the principal being then transferable only on the books of the Company, unless reassigned to bearer; or

The coupons may be detached and canceled, the Bond made a PERMANENT REGISTERED BOND, transferable only on the books of the Company, and the interest made payable only to the registered owner or his attorney.

The three classes OF BONDS will be known respectively as:

1. "Coupon Bonds payable to Bearer."
2. "Registered Bonds with Coupons attached."
3. "Registered Bonds with Coupons detached," and should be so designated by correspondents in specifying the class of Bonds desired.

They have THIRTY YEARS to run from January 15, 1870, with interest at six per cent. per annum from Nov. 1, 1869. PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.

The interest is payable in May and November, thus it may take the place of that of the earlier issues of Five-twenties, and suit the convenience of our friends who already hold Central and Western Pacific Bonds, with interest payable in January and July, and who may desire, in making additional investments, to have their interest receivable at different seasons of the year.

The Loan is secured by a mortgage upon the entire Line of Road from Richmond to the Ohio River, with the equipment and other property and appurtenances complete thereon.

A Sinking Fund of $100,000

PER ANNUM IS PROVIDED FOR THE REDEMPTION OF THE BONDS, TO TAKE EFFECT ONE YEAR AFTER THE COMPLETION OF THE ROAD.

The mortgage is for $15,000,000, of which $6,000,000 will be reserved and held in trust for the redemption of outstanding Bonds of the VIRGINIA CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, now merged in the CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO.

Of the remaining $9,000,000 a sufficient amount will be sold to complete the Road to the Ohio River, pay for and equipment the portion now in operation, and thoroughly equip the whole for a large and active traffic.

The present price is 90 and accrued interest.

A Loan so amply secured, so carefully guarded, and so certain hereafter to command a prominent place among the favorite securities in the markets both of this country and Europe, will be at once appreciated and quickly absorbed.

Very respectfully,

FISK & HATCH,

Bankers.

N. B.—We have issued pamphlets containing full and complete details, maps, &c., which will be furnished upon application.

We buy and sell Government Bonds, and receive the Accounts of Banks, Bankers, Corporations and others, subject to check, allowing such office interest on daily balances.

A Solemn Pre-Speech Reconciliation—The Democratic Policy Debated—The French Cable—An Austrian Vessel Adrift on the Coast of France.

PARIS, Feb. 22.—M. CHEVANDIER DE VALDROME, Minister of the Interior, has submitted to the Emperor and to legislative bodies a report favoring the decentralization of the Executive administration. The Corps Legislatif has referred it to a committee consisting of MM. BAROCHE, GUIZOT, and PREVOST-PARADOL. The Journal Officiel publishes a list of the persons appointed to revise and modify the administrative regulations throughout the Empire in the suggestions made by the Minister of the Interior and approved by the Emperor. Among the names on the list are those of the following (liberals): MM. Benoit, Dary, Desmarets, Guillemin, Guizot, Louis Lazare, Delavergne, and Prevost-Paradol....In the Corps Legislatif the debate on the interpellation regarding the domestic policy of the Government was continued. Count DARU, on the part of the Ministry, replied to the speech delivered yesterday by JULES FAVRE. He pronounced against the demand for a dissolution of the Chamber, declared that the Government desired to maintain peace at home and abroad, and to lay the foundations of a Parliamentary Government. The Emperor had manifested the will to follow a liberal policy. If dissent arose between the Chambers and the Ministry, the Emperor must decide, and the Ministry would respect his will. The speech of the Minister was received with enthusiastic cheers, and the debate terminated with a vote of 228 in favor of and 15 against the Ministry....The preliminary examinations of the persons arrested during the recent troubles have been ended. One hundred and eight were unconditionally discharged, 116 were held to appear before the Court, and 130 were kept under arrest for conspiring against the State and the life of the Emperor....At a meeting of the shareholders of the French Cable Company, held in this city yesterday, the agreement with the Anglo-American, Atlantic and New-York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Companies for a working arrangement looking to economy of expense and expedition of business, was unanimously approved, and the directors were authorized to arrange with the French Government in regard to their exclusive rights, so as to give perfect reciprocity to the United States.

MARSEILLES, Feb. 22.—A vessel painted black and copper, has been seen ashore near Cape Tow, on the north coast of Africa. A boat was present on the shore over which an American flag was flying. No details have yet been received.

The Sunday Trade for London—Proposed Reform—Death of an English Bishop—Spain and Porto Rico—Expulsion of American Clergy from Rome.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—A letter to the Daily News denounces the curtailment of telegraph facilities in London and Liverpool, when the authorities had reason to anticipate and time to prepare for an indefinite expansion of business on the transfer of the telegraph wires to the Government....In the House of Lords to-day Lord CHELMSFORD introduced a bill to secure a better observance of Sunday. It restrains, and in some cases entirely prohibits, trading on this day. Lord CHELMSFORD said this bill is intended to check a growing evil, and read statistics showing that over ten thousand shops were kept open on Sunday in London alone. The Bishop of London spoke in support of the bill. The Earl of MORLEY signified that the bill had the approval of the Government. The Lord Chancellor thought the bill would have the effect of depriving laborers of recreation to which they were entitled on Sunday, and doubted the wisdom and efficacy of the measure. The bill had a second reading....In the House of Commons Mr. BRUCE, Home Secretary, said that the majesty of the law had been fully vindicated in the recent events in Ireland. The Postmaster-General said the Government was not disposed to suffer the branch German-American Cable to be landed at Lowestoff to connect with the office of the Anglo-American Cable Company at London....In view of the many shocking accidents caused by petroleum, laws have been projected for subjecting it to still severer tests. A bill will soon be brought before Parliament looking to this end....The Pacific Steam Navigation Company have planned a semi-monthly line of steamers from Panama to Liverpool, by way of the Straits of Magellan....Right Rev. ASHTON TURNER GILBERT, Bishop of Chichester, died yesterday. He was 84 years old....English engineers have obtained a contract to build three hundred miles of railroad in Japan....A company has been formed here to build a dry dock for Malta.

MADRID, Feb. 22.—A determined contest is anticipated in the Cortes over the adoption of the new Constitution for the Colony of Porto Rico. It is feared that the dispute may lead to a rupture of the good understanding which now exists between parties in the Cortes.

LISBON, Feb. 22.—It is rumored that a band of 800 Miguelists rebels have appeared at Magador.

BERMUDA, Feb. 22.—The postal authorities forbid the sending of money or valuables by mail, and threaten to return letters containing them to the senders.

ROME, Feb. 22.—The discussion of the question of Papal infallibility is expected to be opened in the Ecumenical Council some time this week. Amongst the ecclesiastics expelled from Rome are said to have been several Americans.

CUBA.

Another Outrage on an American—Arrest of the Perpetrators.

HAVANA, Feb. 22.—A report was lately set afloat here by an American that Captain FRANKLIN, of the fishing smack Pulitzer, had helped the escapade of CAPTAIN-GENERAL TUCKER to escape from Key West, and had landed Colonel TUCKER in Cuba. On the arrival of his vessel in the harbor this morning a party of men put off in a boat and rowing up to the smack called for the Captain, and threatened his life. The latter, becoming alarmed, took refuge on board the British man-of-war Kelpie. The men in the boat, finding that the Captain had disappeared, returned to shore, without executing their design of the subject. Through the efforts of the new Consul-General, Mr. BIDDLE, they have since been arrested, and our Government has sent a guard to protect the Pulitzer. General FERRY arrived today from Puerto Principe.

THE MISSISSIPPI DISASTER.

Additional Names of Missing Persons—List of Those Known to be Saved—Marvelous Escapes—Reported Loss of Seventy Lives.

CAIRO, Ill., Feb. 22.—The following additional names of the missing persons who were on board the Emma Ex. S are furnished by Mr. Attenborough, pilot: William Foster, second engineer; James Seeley, Lexington, Ky.; the second cook, unknown, white; Davy Bonsbant, James Chegaren, and two other firemen, names unknown. George Waster, the deckman, is in hospital here, badly burned, but will probably recover. The following persons are known to be saved: James Irnsh, St. Louis; Joseph George, Cancelton; James Ruetcher, Dayton, Ky.; Charles Charleston, second mate; Edward Wylie, watchman; James Ford, John Johnson, G. Collins, Frank Burns, Amos Burns, E. E. Wing, ——Baker and M. M. Force of the deck crew, and Henry Nelson, fireman. Walter Maratis, first clerk, in noble disregard of danger to himself, made an attempt to save a lady, and perished with the others. It is hoped the next arrival from the scene of the disaster will give the names of many saved who are now reported missing.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Feb. 22.—The Captain of the Emma Ex. S, telegraphs from Cairo that seventy lives were lost by the burning of that steamer.

THE CITY OF BOSTON.

The Weather Probably Encountered by the Steamer—A Gloomy Prospect for Her Safety.

TORONTO, Ontario, Feb. 22.—A dispatch from Halifax to the Daily Telegraph says the troop ship Oneida, which left Halifax for England two days before the City of Boston, arrived after a passage of twelve days. She encountered fearful weather. All the horses of the Sixteenth Regiment perished. The news has cast a gloom over Halifax, the safety of the City of Boston being now almost despaired of.

MASSACRE OF INDIANS.

Colonel Baker's Attack on an Indian Village—Men, Women and Children Slaughtered—Sixty Women and Girls Killed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The following letter is published to-day:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 22, 1870.

DEAR SIR: At last the statement in detail of Colonel BAKER's attack on the villages of the Piegans, in Montana, on the 23d of January, has been received. Of the 173 killed, sixty-five were what might be called fighting men, that is, men between the ages of 15 and 17 years. Four were from 17 to 20 years, and eight additional were over 20 and under fifty-three. These were numbered among the fifty-five, or over one-half, of whom were over 50 years of age, and the remaining thirty-five were between 15 and 50 years. Lastly, there were fifty children under 15 years of age killed; many of them were in their mothers' arms. The whole village had been suffering for some two weeks daily, with smallpox, some half-dozen dying daily. The above facts are received to-day from Lieutenant-Colonel W. FRASER, U. S. A., the agent of the Blackfeet, and is indorsed by General SULLY, U. S. A. With regards, faithfully yours,

VINCENT COLLYER, Secretary.

To Felix R. BRUNOT, Chairman, Pittsburg.

The Republican State Convention—The Ticket Nominated—The Platform.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 22.—The Republican State Convention that has just adjourned was the largest and most enthusiastic one ever held in this State, over seventeen hundred delegates, representing every county in the State, being present. At 3 o'clock the Academy of Music, large as it is, proved insufficient to accommodate the vast concourse. It was originally intended to defer nominations until to-morrow, but this programme was altered and the Convention proceeded to work. For the first time in the political history of the State, colored men were numbered with the delegates. The demonstrations that followed the appointment of Rev. W. H. MALONE, colored, as one of the Vice-Presidents, will not soon be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Mr. MALONE is a fine-looking, venerable gentleman, and represents Floyd County, New-Albany District. As he appeared on the stage the band struck up "John Brown." The scene was indescribable, creating a deep and lasting impression upon the three thousand spectators present.

The proceedings of the Convention were of the most harmonious nature. The present incumbents of the offices of Secretary and Auditor of State, MAX HOFFMAN and JOHN D. EVANS, were renominated by acclamation. The contest of the day was over the nomination of a State Treasurer, no fewer than nine names being presented. The most prominent were General MILROY, of Carroll; GORDON KERCHIVAL, of Spencer, and BEAU W. OAKLEY, of Allen. On the fifth ballot General MILROY was declared the choice of the Convention. He has a very fine war record, and is quite a popular man in the State. He is now Speaker of the House, and therefore will have to rely much upon his popularity. The Superintendent of Public Instruction, B. C. HOUNS, and the Supreme Court Judges, ELLIOTT, GASCOIGNE and RAY, were nominated by acclamation. Judge FRANKLIN having declined renomination to the Southern Bench, A. L. OSBORN, of Laporte, after an exciting contest with Judge BUSKIRK, of Owensville, received the nomination. Judge CRAVENS, of the Criminal Court of this county, has been making a strong fight for the Attorneyship, but Colonel NELSON TRUSLER was nominated on the second ballot.

The platform was received with universal applause, it forms a great and strong contrast to the weak, puerile platform adopted at the Bloomington Convention held last month. There is no question of the success of the ticket nominated to-day. Even had not the Fifteenth Amendment increased the Republican vote at least 15,000, the results could hardly have been considered doubtful. At a meeting of the State Central Committee, held to-night, A. H. CONNER, of the Journal, was reappointed Chairman, and JOHN W. BUNSON, of Muncie, Treasurer.

THE RED RIVER.

Reported Arrest of Governor McTavish and other Officers by Rioters—An Oath of Allegiance to the Provisional Government Required.

CHICAGO, Feb. 22.—A letter to the St. Paul Press, dated Pembina, Feb. 10, brings intelligence from Winnipeg to the effect that Wm. MCTAVISH, Governor of the Hudson Bay Company, and Dr. COWAN, also a prominent officer of the Hudson Bay Company, were detected tampering with members of the Provisional Government in order to defeat the final adoption of the Bill of Rights, whereupon General RIELLE had both arrested and placed in confinement. The letter also says G. BANNATYNE, a leading Canadian, took the oath of allegiance to the Provisional Government and was retained in his former office. The Postmaster at Winnipeg attempted to gain access to the prisoners, and being refused threatened to raise a force and liberate them, whereupon he was also arrested and placed in confinement. A private letter says RIELLE is not yet defeated. The agents of the Canadian Government persist in attempting to corrupt the representatives of the people, and there will be serious trouble before affairs are settled.

CONNECTICUT.

The Democratic State Convention—Nomination of Mr. English for Governor—The Resolutions.

NEW-HAVEN, Conn., Feb. 22.—The State Convention of the Democracy of Connecticut was held to-day in Brewster's Hall in this city. A large number of delegates were in attendance, and considerable enthusiasm was exhibited at times during the day. The Convention was organized by the election of Hon. WILLIAM W. EATON, of Hartford, as Chairman. Ex-GOVERNOR HOLCOMB, of New-Haven, was made the first choice, being renominated by acclamation for Governor. JULIUS HOTCHKISS, of Middletown, was nominated for Lieutenant-Governor, with THOMAS M. WALLER, of New-London, as Secretary of State; ERASTUS J. LOGAN for Comptroller, and CHARLES M. FORD, of Hartford, for Treasurer, making up the balance of the State ticket. Resolutions of sympathy were passed on the death of Chief Justice HINMAN, of this State; also a series declaring the principles of the party; claiming that the Fifteenth Amendment is a radical change of the Constitution; reaffirming the position of the party taken eight years ago; declaring the Legal-tender act a violation of the rights of the people; denouncing the extravagance of the Administration, extending sympathy to the patriots of Cuba, and calling for the support of the freemen of the State for the candidates presented.

THE GALLERYSHIPS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 22.—W. JASPER BLACKBURN publishes a card relative to the charge of bribery in procuring cadet appointments, in which he says:

I believe the sum promised was $1,000, but I am very certain but $400 were ever paid. This is the whole story, and if there was any secrecy or fraud intended I am at the first of it. One thing is very certain, there was nothing of the sort intended or thought of on my part, and all insinuations of the kind are false and slanderous. I have nothing to conceal in regard to this or any other transaction of my life, public or private. As a member of Congress I procured the appointment of two young men in my district who did not accept. I then urged Judge DUPAIN and myself to recommend other boys, but it was very desirable that the places should be filled by certain time. I did not have at my command other boys, and never knew or could recommend. As Congress was about to adjourn I was furnished with blanks of form, with the voluntary promise that if the parties could be found or some other should prove competent and acceptable to the Governor, a certain sum should be paid in behalf of those who had and accepted?

THE METHODISTS.

State Convention at Syracuse—Secretary Stanton Adopted.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Feb. 22.—The Methodist State Convention met at Shakespeare Hall, in this city, this afternoon. At the roll call one hundred and sixty-three ministerial delegates and eighty-three lay delegates responded. A Committee of ministers and laymen reported for permanent President Rev. James F. PECK, D. D., of Albany, and a number of Vice-Presidents. For Clerical Secretaries—Rev. J. B. BOOTE, of Syracuse; Rev. J. HUNT, of Batavia. Statistical Secretary—Rev. W. H. DOPPY, of Brooklyn. Financial Secretaries—Joseph HILLMAN, of Troy; Orange Judd, of Flushing, L. I.

Rev. W. H. DEPUY submitted a report on the statistical and historical development of Methodism in the State, showing the great increase in numbers and wealth of the denomination. A brief discussion followed on the advantages of Christian work indicated by the facts and comparisons set forth in the report.

At the evening session the subject of temperance was discussed by Rev. L. C. QUEAL, of Utica, and Rev. M. S. HURD, of Clinton. Rev. L. C. QUEAL read the following resolutions, which were adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That the manufacture or of traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and on religious and morally and moral grounds, is an evil and a sin against God and man, and that we are opposed to the Resolved, That the Methodist Church in the State of New-York owes to her laymen, and to her children, and to the people of the State of New-York, a distinct and decisive Constitutional Amendment, the adoption of the liquor traffic in the coming fall and the aim of temperance.

Resolved, That the Rural districts of temperance, and that the Legislature should be withdrawn from this curse and accursed traffic.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to the work and strength of the Lord, and in the power of the risen and glorified Christ, and in the power of God, who has called us to this work. We confidently expect the hearing of the Whisky trade and the enemies of Christ, in the determination of the people from the slavery of intemperance and the establishment of prohibitory laws.

Resolved, That in carrying out our purpose we pledge ourselves to support the nominating conventions and labor to secure the nomination of good temperance men to office.

After speeches by several of the clergy and laymen, the Convention adjourned until Wednesday morning.

STATE LEGISLATURES.

The North Carolina Railroads—The Constitutional Amendments in Virginia—Woman Suffrage in School Matters in Missouri.

RALEIGH, Ala., Feb. 22.—In the Legislature to-day the House passed the Senate bill repealing all railroad appropriation acts passed during the last session levying a special tax.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 22.—A communication was received in the Legislature to-day from Senator JOHNSON, at Washington, that Virginia's share of the public lands granted for agricultural colleges, amounting to three hundred thousand acres, is now subjected to the order of the State authorities. The report of the House Judiciary Committee declaring a second ratification of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments unnecessary, was adopted. An amendment declaring it unnecessary because of the validity of the former ratification, was defeated. A motion to reconsider the resolution adopted last week, that no persons ineligible under the Fourteenth Amendment shall be elected to office, failed. The erroneous impression that Governor WALKER's message suggested the election of any ineligible persons, was corrected. The Legislature adjourned in honor of the day.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 22.—The Legislature has amended the Public School law so as to allow women to vote in matters relative to schools.

AUSTIN, Texas, Feb. 22.—Mr. C. HAMILTON and Lieutenant-Governor FLANAGAN were to-day elected United States Senators, in accordance with the Radical caucus nominations—the former for the long, and the latter for the short term.

The Cold Snap—Cold Weather Generally Prevalent—The Mazzini Fetches.

MONTREAL, Feb. 22.—Yesterday's snow storm blocked up the railroads in every direction, East and West, and the trains are all stopped. Yesterday's and to-day's Western trains are still at Beauharnois Station, and last night's train was blocked up at Lachine Junction. The Portland train, with the English mails, is snowed in also, and is not expected until Wednesday night or Thursday.

CONCORD, N. H., Feb. 22.—Accounts this morning the thermometer was up here, and at 10 o'clock was 10° above. About twelve inches of snow fell in the last storm on the range of hills from Danbury, Ramsay, and Holderness.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 22.—Five inches of snow fell at Danville to-day.

HELENA, Mon., Feb. 22.—A rain and snow storm prevailed throughout the Territory last night. The weather has been uncommonly mild and pleasant so far this winter. The prospects for the supply of water with which mines are yet much better than they were last year.

VIRGINIA CITY, Mon., Feb. 22.—The weather the last two days was warm and cloudy, with little rain and snow. Owing to the warm weather, mining is quite brisk in the lower parts of the gulch.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 21.—Heavy rains continue in several districts of this entire State.

AUGUSTA, Me., Feb. 22.—The Portland and Lewiston Railroad expects to resume running their passenger trains from Augusta northward in about six days. It will take nearly three months to rebuild the bridge across the Kennebec, and until that time passengers will cross the river on the city bridge and take the train. The water in the river is falling rapidly, but the immediate connections of ice will be a source of danger for some time.

THE CUBAN QUESTION.

General Sickles' Letter Withdrawing the Celebrated Note—Advice of the Spanish Earnest Minister to the United States—Spanish Questions in Cuba—Support of the Administration Counsel at Sagasta.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The remaining documents on the Cuban question were to-day laid before the House, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. General SICKLES addressed to Mr. SILVELA, Sept. 16, 1869, a note, in which he says:

WITHDRAWAL OF THE "NOTE."

"On the 21st of July last, in conjunction with the intervention of his Government, he offered to the Government of Spain the good offices of the United States in the pacification of Cuba, but first Cuba. His Minister, the Minister of State, in a spirited dispatch, declined the offer, and I, in a spirited dispatch, declined the offer, and I, in a spirited dispatch, declined the offer, and I

ENGLAND.

The Government and the Emigration Movement—Licenses for Free Trade—Influence of Alcohol and Malt—Taxation—A National Deputation.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Feb. 5, 1870.

The Government seems to have thrown some cold water on the emigration movement. How can it interfere with the operation of the law of supply and demand? Why should it support idlers, and make it clear to employers? A few years ago there were not hands enough to do the work. Men are now on strike in certain districts. The Telegraph Commissioners found the Yorkshire miners, who made such a riot the other day at Thorncliffe, living like fighting cocks, frying their beefsteaks in butter, and buying costly jewelry. The masters appeal to the Government not to lend people out of the country, but to protect the freedom of labor at home. The trade societies will not allow men to earn such wages at the trade of the country can pay. They desolate whole districts and decree general starvation rather than work or allow others to work for sixpence a day less than the price they demand. They drive the trade to the Continent, and then drive those who would gladly do the work to America and the Colonies. With economy of living, with free trade in labor, with such an equalization of wages as a little more freedom and intelligence would give, I think England might fairly hold her way; but I do not see how it is possible for her to do so under the system of trades unions, which tends to lessen the amount and quality of work done, as well as to raise its price. If England were the only manufacturing country in the world—if there were no France, Germany, Switzerland and America pressing her on all sides, working with more intelligence, a finer taste, a keener ingenuity, and in the case of the European artisans, with a stricter economy, these societies might answer; if all workmen would make common cause throughout the world, it might do. But nationality is stronger than trade societies. A French artisan will not keep up a strike, when he sees his markets supplied with English goods. The Englishman will soon see that every penny he puts on the cost of his manufactures, opens the way for a foreign supply. England, even to keep her own home market, must either have really free trade with the freedom of labor, or resort to protection. But a country that wishes to supply foreign markets cannot have protection at home.

A great impulse, no doubt, has been given to emigration. I think you may expect twice or three times as many this year as last. The colonial agents are active, but no colony offers such inducements as America. Men had rather go at once to the States, change their nationality and have it over, than be perpetually dreading it. Australia is on the other side of the world, with the sun in the north and Christmas in the dog days. A national emigration scheme would be pauperism in excelsis. Besides, it is but a temporary expedient. It will not diminish population any more than war does. For every million sent abroad two million would be born at home. The Poor law is bad enough.

The number of persons who are obliged to pay the Government for the privilege of carrying on their business—who have to get licenses to practice free trade—is something extraordinary. There are about 150,000 publicans, spirit retailers and beer sellers, to begin with; 120,000 dealers in tobacco; nine millions of stamps are required for as many bottles or boxes of patent medicine. Mr. Munsz, M. P. for Birmingham, proposed, the other day, that the workingmen should relieve themselves of a tax of £35,000,000 a year. "How?" asked one of his hearers. "Why, by not spending it," said the practical M. P.; "your liquor costs you seventy millions. I don't ask you to be teetotalers—I take my glass of beer—but only drink half as much, and you will save thirty-five millions per annum."

With the multiplication of spirit and beer houses in low neighborhoods comes a corresponding increase of vagabonds. In Whitechapel, just east of the Bank of England, there are 130 lodging houses of the class to which casual paupers resort when they have the luck to beg or steal enough to get a dinner and a night's lodging—say sixpence. The lodging costs from 2d. to 4d. These houses make up 8,237 beds, or adumbrate that number of shakedowns. The workhouse is full and running over. A steady stream of paupers and vagrants pours into London, and especially into its central and eastern districts. And they are of a sort you have never seen in America. I have seen poverty and vice and misery there—more than enough; but the English vagrant has never emigrated. Not a solitary specimen has crossed the Atlantic. He is a greater curiosity than BARNUM's "What is it?" He may be descended from the ape, but I do not see how he managed to descend so far. I never see him shuffling along Hyde Park, for you may encounter him in the gayest streets of the metropolis, but I stop to look at him in utter astonishment, wondering if this also is "a man and a brother." Nothing can be done for them—they are past education—they are unfit for emigration. They wander about, pick up a precarious living, sleep in casual wards or those cheap lodging houses, die in the poorhouse, and are buried in the Potter's Field. One reason why a London Coroner has at times three cases of starvation in a day is that the better class of the poor had rather die even of the pangs of hunger, with their skin clinging to their ribs, than come into contact with such vagabonds.

TAXATION.

Taxes are always interesting. In England, where the burdens of the public debt—army, navy and civil service—are greater than in any other country, in proportion to the earnings of the masses of the people, there is a great effort not only to reduce the general burden, but to tax as few articles as possible. At the last session Mr. LOWE removed several heavy burdens which operated as clogs on industry, and there are great hopes of further reductions. Large economies are being carried out. The army is to be reduced by ten thousand; several dockyards are closed; clerks are superannuated or dismissed; hard times for many are made harder. But a member of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce has moved some resolutions in that body in favor of the abolition of a large portion of the remaining duties on foreign fruits, coffee, chicory, cocoa, plate, cards, vinegar, sponge, tea, sugar, molasses, (the three last pay about £4,000,000;) stamp duties on marine insurances, medicines, cards, gold and silver plate, banker's, attorney's and conveyancer's licenses; taxes on male servants, carriages, horses and mules, horse dealers, armorial bearings; licenses for coapmakers, hawkers and peddlers, auctioneers, &c. All unequal, vexatious and a detriment to that freedom of trade in which England glories. The movement of liberal politics is for the greatest possible simplicity and equality in taxation, with incidental protection to health and morals. Thus, the great sources of revenue are the tax on alcohol and tobacco. If Englishmen only choose to neither drink nor smoke, and the above resolutions were carried out, or even Mr. BRIGHT's idea of a free breakfast table, the property and income taxes would be the only burdens, and these would be felt by the poor only in higher rents and prices for some things, and perhaps in lower wages; for those burdens equalize themselves after a time, as surely as water finds its level. If you draw your water from a hundred wells instead of from a lake or river, you require the more labor and machinery to do it—that is all. It comes from the rills of human industry at last. Labor pays, and nothing else pays; but in the collection you may vex labor and double its burdens. In England it costs in some cases £1,000 to collect £10, which is not an economical system. It is my belief that means might be found for collecting the entire revenue at an almost nominal cost, which would be running the machine with the minimum of friction.

A NATIONAL DEPUTATION.

When the King of Belgium came over to England a few months ago to visit Her Majesty the Queen, the officers of volunteers presented an address to His Majesty, thanking him for the hospitality with which he had entertained them in his own capital the year before. The Lord Mayor of London had also some returns to make for favors received, and he invited all the Mayors of the cities of the United Kingdom to come and help him do the honors of the metropolis to the Royal visitor. They came, presented an address, and had a wonderful banquet. The address they presented was then inclosed in a magnificent silver casket, on whose four sides are represented the cities of London, Edinburgh, Dublin, and Tenby, in Wales. This box has just been carried across the sea and presented to the King of Belgium by the most wonderful deputation that ever went from the United Kingdom, or, I think, any other Kingdom, since the world began. It consists of 145 Mayors, most of them accompanied by their wives. They had a long and rough passage across the German Ocean, but arrived safely at Brussels, with the casket. The municipal authorities of Brussels received them at the railway station, and in regular city carriages, and several large army wagons for baggage, to transport them to the quarters provided for them. The King was obliged to move for the time to a larger palace, that he might have room to entertain them; and, when they had the inevitable feast, there was not room for the Lady Mayoresses. Continental etiquette does not permit that ladies should be banished to a handy gallery to smell the odors of the dishes the lords of creation are eating; so, while the Mayors were eating, as only English Mayors can, their ladies were entertained at the opera. The accounts of the festivities the continent, (for they all carried their swaggers of state, making a London Lord Mayor's show multiplied by one hundred and forty-five,) and the entire invasion, are very droll; and the Times is very sorry, as if the civic dignaries of the United Kingdom had done something unusually ridiculous. The casket might have been sent over by a messenger, or entrusted to PEREPONT & Co. That is true; but, if an English Mayor had a present to make to a King, why should he not show his respect for royalty by carrying it? And if one, why not all? They had, as the Times ill-naturedly puts it, "the opportunity of indulging in a good, steady, British stare at royalty, and so transcendant a pleasure must compensate in some measure for the want of individual recognition from their Majesties. These are the people," continues the Times,

"who are always shouting with enthusiasm for every royal, illustrious or eminent personage. These displays make us ridiculous on the Continent, and it is of no use to explain that in this free and independent country everybody, small or great, can claim to represent everything. The village haberdasher calls his shop the National Emporium, and we have all heard of the three tailors who styled themselves 'the people of England.' So, pushing persons who want to amuse themselves for a week do not scruple to go with their wives and daughters as a national deputation. We do not grudge them the enjoyment they may get, but we do wish it to be understood that such an expedition is in no sense whatever national, and that the English people, if they wish to show their respect to a foreign Sovereign in his own capital, will find quite another kind of representative."

Now the King of Belgium reads the Times. It is to be found in every hotel in Brussels. Imagine the 145 English Mayors, with many of their wives, in the midst of all the glories of their week of festivities, reading such a leading article!

AFFAIRS IN SPAIN.

Castelar on the Clergy Budget—An Eloquent Address Advocating its Abolition—Memoirs to the American Minister—Progress of the Republican Organization.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MADRID, Wednesday, Feb. 9, 1870.

The discussion on the Clergy budget, which took place yesterday in the Cortes, gave rise to some very animated scenes. The Republican orators had resolved to oppose the payment of half the salaries of the clergy, and Señor CASTELAR made a speech on the subject which was another triumph for him and his party. The following are the most salient points of his speech:

Señor CASTELAR said: Several deputies of the majority have felt offended at the words of Señor BARCIA, but they ought to remember the many malediction which have been launched from other tribunes, which I do not want to name here, upon those who were of our opinion. In this place orators discuss, they even obey their conscientious convictions, but they do not insult people. I do not feel in respect of the ancient glory of times now happily past, of the San Nevas and del Salado; of the ancient glories of the Alhambra; of the little kingdom of Pelayo spreading the inquisition to the islands dragged from silence of the Western Ocean by Columbus; I can remind you of Spain defeated by my government, of the Spanish national conscience struck dumb, of Spain's unfortunates distressed by the spirit of this century, of her great merchants in exile, the farmers wounded to the heart, dragged from their hearths, of the sacrifices given in the fields of Africa, of the inquisitorial tribunal in the midst of a world excited by the spirit of fanaticism and beside themselves with rage and desire for revenge; and all this because the intolerance of the Church desired to offer human sacrifices to the god of the Gospel. I speak of the question of the clerical budget only, because it is entirely political. The budget of the civilist proves that the nation needs a fastidious tutorship; the budget of the army proves that the nation obeys only force; that of the Sovereignty proves that the people cannot take care of its own interests; that of the clergy proves that the people need a tutorship of a governmental character. Expenses of this sort may be indulged in by a large and numerous nation like Russia, by a great and strong one like France; but never by a free nation, like the glorious people of America. The Budget of Spanish national receipts does not with a diminution of nearly 300 of reals; the enormous enhancement of the salt trade has followed the fall in the price of produce; the nation has gained 600,000,000; but the Budget of expenses has not yet been touched by the break of the revolution. The Budget of the clergy has remained the same, and, in spite of our efforts, all monarchical and democratic governments have been harassed, by the clergy. Before the revolution a dark night surrounded the national intelligence. The University, like the primary school, was submitted to the sacristy. The Cortes obeyed the clergy and the King. You dare not even hope, I think, for expression of the light of man rose upwards without the throne and the altar conspiring to smother it. I desire to speak for the diminishing of the Budget of the clergy, and we have the right to do so. We must understand each other. The Church has two existences; the spiritual and temporal life, its social and political life. The Church owes its spiritual life to its founder, to the preaching of the doctrines of the apostles, and to the light spread by those doctrines. In this way the Church defies attacks; but besides being a spiritual, it is also a political power, and its faculties and rights are identical with the rights of the State. During the first reforms, when the great religious changes took place by the absolute authority of Kings, and the great Lords of Germany found means of profit in LUTHER's doctrines, HENRY VIII., master of the Saxish nation and of their consciences, could change the Catholic rite for the Protestant, and other Kings were enabled to do the same. This proves that no political power ought to sacrifice its liberty, because, in doing so, conscience is sacrificed and with it religion. The Absolutist Party has less right than any other to ask us by what right we intervene in the affairs of the Church. All Kings have believed themselves authorized to do what they liked with the property of the Church. PETER the Cruel, ISABELLA the Catholic, CHARLES V., PHILIP II., believed themselves authorized to take possession of the Church's property; and we certainly have the right to reduce its budget. Kings, when they needed money for war expenses, sold the jewels of the churches. ISABELLA the Catholic, in her wars against the Portuguese, and CHARLES V. in those against the French, sold the vessels of the altars. NAPOLEON I. said: 'I can do anything for I am omnipotent, with the soldier, the gendarme and the priest,' and France pays her clergy one hundred and ninety millions, besides four millions paid by the municipalities and sixty-nine millions paid by the departments. Compare the Budget of Spain, which has only sixteen millions of inhabitants, with that of France with its forty millions, and you will see the difference. Have you ever found, amongst the Spanish Clergy, an Archbishop of Orleans, a Maret capable of rising against the Jesuitic Pious of Hildemarquent? Has a Spanish Bishop ever dared to say to the Pope, as did Monseigneur DUPANLOUP: 'Your universal religious autocracy will not go beyond the Alps, which defend; see only the integrity of our territory, but also the moral independence of my country.' Our Spanish clergy is the most Ultramontane of Europe; the most dependent on the Jesuits of Rome; the most generous Spain. (Applause.) The Belgians, the most Catholic people on earth, pay only 2,600,000 of francs to their clergy. The Portuguese pay only 4,000,000 of francs, comparatively much less than Spain. We have seven nine Provinces and sixty-nine ecclesiastical dioceses. In the Middle Ages the Church was omnipotent; to-day it is just the contrary; and the people listen with no more enthusiasm to the chants of the priests than to a sonata by MOZART or a symphony by BEETHOVEN. The Church has lost its influence. When I was in Rome I heard PIUS's 'Miserere' in the Basilica of St. Peter; the sublime prayer which the Pope never wanted to give to other nations, and of which he kept the monopoly. But MOZART heard, and he has put it in a sonata which is astonishing in the wealth of art. The Church is no longer the Church of the universe, useless clergy, who are only demoralizing the people. I know that there was a minister who thought and said that the superior clergy ought to receive smaller salaries, the Primate of Toledo to have one thousand pounds sterling, the other archbishops eight hundred, and the bishops six hundred. The St. Cucuzada produces annually fourteen millions. Leave them to the Church. Nobody will be here, nor nearly, nor the majority, to propose that to the clergy, which has will cost us a million. Leave them to the Church, and this will go far with the talent for economy inherent to private. It is to be desired that the 12,000 parishes of Spain shall be reduced to 6,000, and that the priests shall be nominated by the majority of the faithful. Señor ZORILLA, when Minister of Justice, found 'I will offer only to consider his projects of laws' proposing that the clergy should be deprived of the majority in the Cortes condemned him to inaction. In the question of the Royal Conjecture the efforts of the Ministry have been fruitless; they were forced to break off their secret military dealings with the Duke de MONTPENSIER; it is a question of the crown jewels the majority has shamefully stolen, and the opinions of the Cortes are so much strong, that the question of reforms at Porto Rico. All this proves that conservative elements are worthless during revolutionary periods. If you will admit the budget of the Clergy, the Cortes, in the certain members of Government, will be to decide, you will see the inauguration in Spain of a thoroughly Roman state of affairs. There the schools are abominable, the finances perfectly chaotic, legislation non-existent or dependent on the will of the Head of the Church, no institution which can boast of a modern character, no Press, no orators, no music, no art, no sciences; it is only a city in positione, suffocated under the pressure of the Government, which admits not even a breath of liberty. If you deprive mixed system, a Catholic to pay his rates for the establishment of a religion which is not the own, and the same cause can happen which is of Ireland before you. In Switzerland the movement for separating the Church from the State is making itself felt. In Germany the same effect may be manifest. We cannot penetrate the counsels of the Council of Rome, but you may be certain that, if the Council of Rome, the illustrious prelates who in the Council of Trent defended the independence of the Church. If the decree of the infallibility of the Pope is ratified, a convocation of the French, Italian, Spanish and German Churches will be useless, for your revolution will be declared blasphemous by the Vatican, and, in a second, excommunicated. There is no remedy but to separate the Church and the State. If you do not want to find yourself every day fighting against Rome, both in the State and in the bosom of your families; if you want to do a great good, do away with the Budget of the clergy!

The orator was much applauded and heartily congratulated by the Deputies on the success of his speech. This discourse has drawn from the Ministry an important declaration, which it is worth while to chronicle. The Government will bring in a project of law, in virtue of which the money will be paid out of the produce of the sale of the ecclesiastical properties, and the remaining portion will be found by the members of the different parties.

REVIEW OF TROOPS.

The great review of troops which I spoke of in my last letter has been postponed till Saturday, the 5th inst., on account of the heavy snows which have fallen in Madrid. Our Minister, General SICKLES, has been specially invited to attend.

REPUBLICAN ORGANIZATION.

The Republican organization is progressing very steadily. There are but two ways now for Spain to get out of its present dilemma—the choice of the Duke of MONTPENSIER as King, or the adoption of the Republic, and I can assure you that the former has comparatively very little hope of success. The Spanish nation will sooner or later perceive that a Republic is the most suitable form of government they can choose.

ITALY.

Records of the Roman Penal Servitude—The Council of the Church—Further News of New Industries—The State of Sardinia.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FLORENCE, Tuesday, Jan. 25, 1870.

From what has come to my knowledge since I wrote to you about the non-arrival of the first letters which I sent on my visit to Rome in December, I am convinced that they were broken open and destroyed at the Rome Post Office. In the two or three letters giving an account of the ceremonies connected with the opening of the Council, I indulged in a tolerably severe criticism of the splendid mockery of the Christianity of Christ presented by that spectacle. In my note I suggested to you that on account of my neglecting to change the usual address of my letters to the Turin, the Post Office spies of Rome were put on the scent, and as nothing which expressed doubt of the infallibility of the ecclesiastical power, and the perfection of the system, is allowed to have utterance, I was in a degree prepared for such a fate for what I had written, which I stupidly allowed to be discovered. I regret the more the loss of the letters, for in them I had made an effort to give, as well as I could, the spirit of the occasion, as an illustration of the present Roman system. It is certainly foolish on the part of the Roman inquisitorial authority to think, in such an unprincipled way, to suppress the truth, for it may be scattered on another occasion with greater severity, helped by the new fact added by such conduct. I have been in Rome about fifteen times since my first visit in 1824, and in all probability shall before long go there again. I am happy to reckon among ecclesiastics a number of friends; but I have so little confidence in what may happen, that I do not go down there without the precaution of taking with me the diplomatic passport which one of our former representatives here was kind enough to prepare for me. It is not only suppressing letters, when a hand can be put upon them, but writers of the most influential journals are sent away on the most trivial charge, when the Police authority can go so far, without running the risk of being called to account. I know you, old Roman spy of the Inquisition, and see you now, peering with your cunning, merciless eyes through your fingers—those fingers bony, raw and red with the stains of old, and itching for the blood of new victims! Heap fagots, Fra Benedict and Fra Dominic, until you scorch your fingers, so that another heretic may fry. Do work of wicked man in the name of God, St. Francis and the Madonna.

As the Inquisitor of the Roman Post Office, with the clue in his hand, broke open my first letter, his reasoning was of this kind: Ah, here is another from the barbarous outside world who has penetrated into this pure and holy city, to tell his false tale of our pious rites. Indeed, the letter is signed "Angelico," a name which in the Kingdom of Italy is ironically given to the Holy Father. It must be some Roman artist that long ago we banished for his political and theological wrong thinking. He has learned to write English; alas, like too many of our misled countrymen, and has thus found a much greater audience of heretical listeners. Our old instruments long ago went to the melting pot, but we still have a way, and here goes letter, instead of writer, to the flames.

I have no doubt that the seal of some of the agents of the Pope exceeds what would be approved by the more intelligent judgment of leaders. Breaking open and tearing up letters, for the purpose of stopping free utterance, is like trying to put out the light of the sun by hanging up a curtain. Light will break through the rotten veil, and the whole broad sky is large and bright enough to reflect every ray. I pity and pardon those condemned to live in the darkness with which they try to envelope others.

THE COUNCIL.

The Fathers in council at Rome hold their meetings more frequently than they did at first. There seems to be something like a growing impatience among them, to which the managers are called upon to pay attention. The sessions are now held nearly every day, and generally continue four or five hours. There is clerical authority for saying that the Pope, most of all, desires expedition, and expresses, decidedly, his wish that the discussion may be free and thorough. The Bishop of Constance lately had an audience with His Holiness for the purpose of putting in his hand a purse of 100,000 francs, collected among the faithful of his diocese. On that occasion Pius IX. is said to have remarked that he cherished the hope that the Fathers would not go from their dioceses, by the work of the Council, more than four or five months, and that that wish did not depend upon him, but upon

PARLIAMENT.

The session of Parliament has been put off until the 7th of March. The Ministers of that time will have full time to mature their scheme, and to fortify themselves with the best facts and arguments they can bring together against an enemy ever ready for attack. Italy is in the full enjoyment of a liberal Constitutional regime, and Parliament will use its privileges and will continue to do things with which critics will find fault. So far as I can see, the Government machine is working very well, only needing, what it has so long wanted, more grease for the wheels, in the form of money, to stop a creaking which has been heard all over the world. There is no denying that there is great confusion in the finances, for upon that all authorities are agreed. But what is more, there is a continued unsettling to anarchy, or, as some phrase it, chaos, referring to the bureaus of the Departments. The frequent changes of Ministers and the want of courage for the exercise of rigid authority has enabled the crowd of inferior placemen to have it very much their own way. The accounts are badly kept, and it is sometimes the case that those who wish to transact business in the Department have to wait a month for what, under a good system, could be done in half an hour. A radical reform is demanded from beginning to end, and a man with little less than genius is needed to do the work, and he must be allowed a pretty free field. But as the case is, we must not doubt that reform will come and a cure be found at last, although we may be obliged to wait some time yet.

NEED OF NEW INDUSTRIES.

A great want of the country is the creation of new industries which shall absorb large numbers of the population who have the shiftless ambition to be doing nothing, dawdling placemen. This class of young men—have a kind of talent adapted to fancy work, and, trained with the good models of taste, of which the past has left the museums of the country full, they might become the fabricators of articles which now come from France, Germany and England, and, of which the shops in all the cities are running over. It is a habit fatal to the prosperity of a country, that of believing that what comes from a foreign country is best; and this illusion, or superstition, is too much encouraged among those of the new generation of Italians. Indeed, one cannot fail to observe the increased attention every year gives to the study of Design and its application to industry. Italy is far from taking the lead in this activity; but in view of national wants and future needs, something is doing. The country does indeed to stand first for the variety and excellence of its manufactures, is the one which must do most for the perfection of that kind of skill which has to do with beauty of form, joined to color, upon which the value of manufactured products so much depends. I visited lately a public establishment in Florence, one of the best of its kind, in which five or six hundred persons are enjoying the benefits of a charitable foundation. Most of the large company were orphans, or children of parents incapable of taking care of their offspring. It was interesting to see that a great part of them were receiving instruction in such branches of design as are adapted to industrial pursuits. Models of architectural ornament or of foliage, flowers and geometrical forms, and, indeed, of whatever enters into the ornament of stamped, carved or woven fabrics, were hung about the room. The value of such a study cannot be overestimated. A moment's thought is sufficient to show that the leading position which France holds, for the beauty and good taste of its manufactured products, is due mostly to the attention which has for a long time been given to this matter. In France the study of the principles of taste is required to a system, and, it is this which makes the Parisians the Greeks of our day. England for the past five-and-twenty years has been making a great effort not to be left behind, more, perhaps, with reference to commercial gain than from patriotic love. It is quite true that our country made a greater effort in this direction. We may not know it, but our civilization is yet very rude, and it must continue to be so long as we are content to borrow such ornaments as we have from others, instead of making it out of our own brain. Circles nearer you may not feel the force of this argument, but the more reflection there is the more it will have weight.

THE SHIPPING QUESTION.

Teachings of English History—The Investigations of the Commons Prior to the Repeal of the Navigation Laws—What Impressive Examples Mark.

From Our Special Correspondent.

LONDON, Monday, Jan. 31, 1870.

I have just completed the rather tedious task of reading through the great mass of evidence which was taken before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, on the Navigation laws of Great Britain prior to the repeal of those laws in 1847. The subject is interesting at this time, when questions connected with the shipping interests of the United States are anxiously discussed in the American Press, and are sure to occupy the attention of Congress. Under the old British Navigation laws, British shipbuilders and shipowners enjoyed a protection in the colonial and many other trades which was nearly as absolute as the protection which now shields the American shipbuilder and shipowner in the coasting trade of the States. The Free Trade Party of this country, flushed with its success in repealing the Corn laws, resolved to abolish the monopoly which the Navigation laws conferred upon British shipping. They opened the war with the declaration that the effect of the exclusive privileges enjoyed by British ships was injurious to the general interests of the country, inasmuch as it kept up the cost of transportation of both inward and outward bound goods. The advocates of repeal claimed, and with much reason, that the shipping interests should be subjected to the policy of open competition, which they—the shipowners—had especially favored when the repeal of the Corn laws had been under discussion. The shipbuilders and shipowners of Great Britain took a different view of the question of free trade upon it was proposed that it should be applied to their own industries. Many of the most ardent advocates for the free importation of corpses, fished about and hooted extreme protectionists as soon as it became plain that an attempt would be made to extend the policy of free trade to ships and freights.

The Select Committee, to which the investigation of the subject was referred by the House of Commons, was composed of men well qualified to deal with the important questions which engaged their attention. It comprised, with others of lesser fame—Sir Robert Peel, Mr. Bright, Mr. Joseph Hume, Mr. Thomas Baring, Mr. Ricardo and Mr. Milner Gibson, with Sir Howard Douglas and Admiral Dundas representing the opinions and interests of the British Navy. The evidence filled five large Blue Books, and comprised upwards of 8,000 questions and replies. Much of the evidence is interesting and parts of it are very amusing. The witnesses who represented the shipping interests loudly proclaimed their belief that the maritime power and greatness of England would be utterly destroyed if the Navigation laws were tampered with. Foreign ships manned with foreign sailors would supplant the ships of Great Britain upon every sea, while British shipbuilders and shipowners would be driven to destitution and forced to seek refuge and support in the charity of their countrymen. While strenuously denying that protection affected the price of freights, they declared that free trade in freights and ships would drive British shipbuilders and shipowners into a state of abject misery, and [illegible] Lyrer from the [illegible] skill of the most physicians has been [illegible] it, and the best medical aid of this city [illegible] prematurely summoned. From the [illegible] of some of our physicians in meeting [illegible] disorder in their army practice, we anticipate that a check will be put to it. We learned last night that there seemed to be some hopes of saving a few of the more recent cases, but even now the message is making fearful headway.

THE CASE OF GEORGIA.

The State Constitution and its Organization, Old and New.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Feb. 17, 1870.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

My attention has just been directed to your editorial of this morning on the "Case of Georgia," in which you quote the following assertions:

"That the Legislature, in existing in December last, when the act of Congress was passed, was unlawfully organized; that they, the majority in that body, had disregarded the Congressional requirements, as well as the letter and spirit of the local Constitution, and had "filled a portion of the seats they did not legally." "that the notoriety of these circumstances constituted the wrongness of the passing the act of Congress; and "that a Legislature whose organization was at variance with fundamental law, and whose action Provoked Federal intervention, cannot be held entitled to elect Senators."

Further on you say:

"The whole business of reconstruction presupposes an ample discretionary authority on the part of the District Commander. Much has necessarily been left to his judgment."

I am confident that you are mistaken in some of your premises, and the conclusion to which they have led you. This is because you have not kept in mind the earlier history of the Georgia Legislature, and as a Republican member of that body I would ask most respectfully to point out the mistakes which you have made. I doubt not you will concede, that, however "ample" may be "the discretionary authority" of the present District Commander, it does not exceed that of his predecessor, and that quite as "much" was "left" to the judgment of General MEADE as to that of General TAYLOR. Dismissing these facts, it will be well for you to consider how General MEADE exercised his discretionary authority, and how he used his judgment in organizing the Georgia Legislature in July, 1868. He left each branch of the General Assembly to exercise the right conferred by the Constitution of the State to determine for themselves the qualifications of their members. While he did this, nothing in the Reconstruction Act has expressly or impliedly, has required of each member no other oath than that which was prescribed in the State Constitution. After they were thus sworn in, he required each House to institute an inquiry into the eligibility of its members under the "test oath" prescribed by the Constitution of the United States. Each white member declared under oath that he was not ineligible under that test oath—that is, that he had never held such an office as was within the meaning of the third section of that article, or, if he had held such an office, that he had not thereafter engaged in insurrection, or rebellion against the United States, nor render aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. After this investigation, each House found that all the members were eligible. That action of the body was approved by General MEADE, assented to by the Governor of Georgia, and accepted by Congress when the early Reconstruction Act was subsequently pronounced touching the eligibility of all the members, and that question became res adjudicata, meeting the approbation of all parties concerned for the space of two months. Within that time, the Fourteenth Article was ratified, and fundamental conditions required by Congress were accepted; State House officers and United States Senators were elected; the Governor was elected under the new Constitution; the military power became subordinate to the civil; many important laws were passed and approved in regular course. The Honorable Senators and Representatives from Georgia, having fully complied with all the requirements of the Reconstruction Acts, was entitled to representation, and forthwith admitted the Representatives from that State.

Now, then, can you say that the Legislature was "unlawfully organized," that the "Congressional requirements were disregarded" in that organization, that the organization "was at variance with fundamental law," and that the Legislature "cannot be held entitled to elect Senators?" You say that "the notoriety of these circumstances constituted the wrongness of Congress." If so far as your assertion related to the expulsion of the colored members of the Legislature, I will admit the justice of your sentence. But when did that event occur? Two months after the organization! Two months after there had been a general acquiescence in the legality of that organization.

The mistake which every one has made in discussing the "Georgia case," and arriving at conclusions, is this: They get the idea of expulsion of the colored members back of the first wrong act of the Legislature, and assume that in the very organization of that body there was some fatal deficiency. They say, assume it, for I must insist that the fact has never been established by any authoritative proceeding to adjudicate that question. Let me first forget that the first organization was the result of an acceptance in instantaneous and a prominent judgment. It is impossible that notoriety should be accepted in lieu of a judgment by those who will demand a good reason for setting aside some of the most important acts of a legislative body. Now, granting that there might have been (which has not yet been proved) some defects in that organization, some informalities in that first organization, there was no more than there have been in the present organization, which you endeavor to palliate. But, in the first, whatever defects might have been, they were unknown and quiescent in and during the space of six months, and until Representatives were actually admitted to their seats in Congress. The only competent authority—the only one known to the law as competent—has decided that all the members of that Legislature, who were eligible, and that decision was accepted and acted upon by all parties concerned, except the Senators of the United States, and that body refused to admit the Senators elect because the Legislature expelled the colored members, waiting to retrace that wrong before they would admit them. I am not whether your judgment would preclude them from providing a remedy.

Now, I would, respectfully ask, has the judgment, once pronounced, accepted and acted upon, ever been reversed? I cannot see to consider this question attentively in the light of a history which cannot be hid from the view of the American people. I admit that there are twenty-eight persons who were members of that first organization, who are now held and treated as ineligible. Their eligibility had been assented to under the administration of a District Commander, who, in the exercise of authority conferred, had to that of his successor, and who, in the exercise of that authority, adjudged them to be rightfully entitled to their seats. How is it that they are now held and treated as ineligible? Has it been after an investigation of the facts in each case, and the promulgation of a judgment thereon? Not at all, except in the case of five of their number—two in the Senate and three in the House. The facts in the cases of only five of the twenty-eight were even inquired into by General MEADE "military commission." If that was a competent tribunal; if any such method of determining the qualifications of members of a Legislature is warranted in any of the Reconstruction acts; if any such power is conferred on the "discretionary authority" of a District Commander, it affects the cases of only five persons. Suppose, then, the method in question, and the power that decided on them, were illegal; suppose, did the presence of those five ineligible members render the organization, the whole body "unlawful," and put it at "variance with fundamental law?"

But let us go one step further into this subject. Is it certain that even the "Military Commission" had decided that those five were actually ineligible at the time they were sworn into the first organization? If it held them, among some twenty others, I believe, that the oath prescribed in the act of December last exempts them and such persons from disqualifying, and than any included in the third section of the fourteenth article. Did the "Military Commission" rest their verdict upon simply the disqualifications contained in the fourteenth article, or upon the additional disqualifications supposed to be contained in the oath prescribed in the act of December last? The record does not state, and it is fair to presume that the judgment was based upon the latter class of disqualifications, inasmuch as each of the members had previously sworn that he was not excluded by the former disqualifications. It does not appear as yet, then, from any judgment actually passed upon the fourteenth article, that any were ineligible at the time the General Assembly was first organized, and such a judgment ought to have been formally announced, not only in the case of the five, but of a majority of the General Assembly, to justify either your premises or conclusions.

As for the other twenty-three members, who are now held and treated as ineligible, they are sent as "refused," "suspended," "declined" or were "unable" to take one of the prescribed oaths. One of them was "unable" to do so because he was confined at home sick at the time, and another who was not elected has been seated in his place. Those who, from any cause, did not take the oath, are now excluded by the terms of the act, and these very terms show how extensive was the purpose to reduce the former, and increase by new one, the present representation. But why did so many refuse to qualify under the late act, and resume their seats? Evidently because they were persuaded that the act extended the disqualifications beyond the number embraced in the Fourteenth Amendment. It does not appear from any actual adjudication, that any of them were really ineligible. But suppose they all were, did their presence invalidate the whole organization? If so, what means the clause of the Constitution which confers upon a quorum the power to perform any act? There were 121 eligible members present and voting when the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified by the Senate of Georgia, and fifty-six more than a quorum, and of the number of eligible members voting, sixteen were for ratification. There were present, as a joint ballot, 133 who voted for ratification. Were those acts rendered void simply because there were two, or even all the persons sworn in who were now held, under the same act of Congress, to be ineligible? In view of this state of facts, will the Times maintain its position that the Legislature was not competent to elect Senators?

This is a greater case than many Senate [illegible] imagined it to be. If the Republican Party fails with its as your editorial seems to do, it will be will become a question for the whole American people to consider for regard to the nature, its history and its consequences.

THE TURF.

The Second Trotting Convention and Mile-Heat Rules.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES: [illegible]

The proceedings of the Convention of Trotting Associations from every part of the United States, which assembled in Congress in this City during the early part of the present month, were fully reported in our columns at the time. The avowed object of this Congress was to devise measures for the reform of the numerous abuses which of late years have flourished on the trotting turf, and make the name of this sport, applied, [illegible] with [illegible] unanimous, with, entailing in the estimation of the public. Delegates from every Trotting Association and prominent patrons of the turf in the United States were present, and their opinions and experience in the matter were directed to the consideration of the important subjects before them. The result of their conclusions was the organization of a body styled the "National Association for the Protection of the Interests of the American Trotting Turf," whose principal object was conceived to be the prevention, detection, and punishment of frauds on the trotting turf of America, and the elevation of the standard of trotting.

President, Vice-Presidents, and other officials were appointed to their various stations, and laws for the government of the Association adopted, which contain the most important part of the business of the Congress. The Congress also viewed the necessity of a code of rules and regulations for the government of trotting, which should be regarded as a chart or guide on every track in America. A committee of nine delegates, one of whom I am proud to say was myself, was appointed to carry into effect the resolution of the Congress, which also gave the committee authority to draft the rules, subject to the approval of the Association. While other matters have occurred in the publication of the new amended rules of trotting, and these interested in the sport are naturally anxious to see in what respects they differ from the rules hitherto in vogue, I will, with your permission, lay out Long Island, the Union and the Fashion, which for so many years have governed the sport. Our space forbids us publishing the rules in extenso, but we give a succinct synopsis of the amendments and alterations, showing in what respects they differ from those hitherto recognized as authoritative. It will be seen that they are materially, they are calculated to effect the main object of the framers, "the prevention, detection, and punishment of frauds on the trotting turf of America, and the elevation of the standard of trotting."

Entries.—In future, in all cases of horses for sale, the owner, or entry, shall state the horse shall be accurately and distinctly given. If the horse has ever trotted in a race under a different name, the former name or names must be given. If a horse has trotted in any race without a sufficient number of heats, or has performed in a manner to enable persons interested to identify the horse. Any person found guilty of making a false and fraudulent entry, or of disguising a horse with intent to conceal his identity, or assist in any way concerned therein in attempting to do so, or doing so, or participating in any fraud or imposition, which shall operate injuriously to the interests of horses. This is an excellent rule, for hitherto an unscrupulous owner or driver could enter a horse either without a name or under a false one, concealing his identity. The penalties for such offenses are very severe, and the rule, and this same, constitutes a departure from all the courses represented in the Association, and not that alone on which the offence was committed.

Qualifying.—A horse shall not participate to start in any race, that has beaten the time adopted prior to the beginning of the meeting at the place for which he is entered. Time made in single or double harness, at fairs or on any track, whether short or not, shall constitute a record, but time made under the saddle shall not be any check to prevent a horse from trotting. The object of this will be to avoid the lengthening of short tracks to fish full and legitimate records.

Drivers.—If any owner, trainer, rider, driver or attendant of a horse, or any other person, use improper language to the officers of the course or the judges in the race, or be guilty of any improper conduct, the person or persons so offending shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by suspension, or by expulsion. It must be remembered that when the word "suspension" occurs in these rules, it means suspension from entering, riding, driving, training or assisting on the grounds of any course belonging to the Association. To those who have been present on some trotting tracks, and heard with disgust the language used by owners or drivers to the judges in the stand, this importance of this rule will be apparent.

Power of Judges.—Judges are given entire control and authority over the horses in a race, and the riders or drivers and assistants of the horses, and any person refusing to obey their orders shall be fined not exceeding $100, or by suspension or expulsion.

Delay in Scoring.—Every visitor to a trotting track has noticed and condemned the practice of drivers to waste unnecessary time in scoring to get the word for a start, and much vexatious delay has thus been caused. The new rule strikes an effectual blow at this sport, for it enacts that "drivers or riders who persist in causing delay in scoring after the horses are called up, either by neglecting to prepare for the race in time, or by neglecting to come for the word, or otherwise, or by keeping so far ahead of others in scoring that the judges cannot give a fair start, shall be fined not exceeding $100, or may be ruled out by the judges, and considered drawn, but in all cases of violence they shall be liable to forfeit. Drivers and riders persisting in causing delay in scoring shall be fined, or be suspended, not to exceed one year, or by expulsion.

Improperly Conducting a Race.—If the judges are satisfied that a race is being or has been conducted improperly on the part of any rider or driver, they can punish the offender by suspension or expulsion, not to exceed one year. A repetition of the offence may entail his complete expulsion.

Horse Improperly Broken.—If a horse is improperly pulled, or fraudulently broken to allow another horse to win, the horse offer horse so pulled or broken shall be disbarred, and the driver shall be punished, unless this decision shall be deemed to favor a fraud, by suspension not to exceed one year, or by expulsion. But in case the judges shall deem such decision as the effect of a fraud, they shall deem that heat "no heat," and shall substitute another driver for the offending one.

Crossing at the Homestretch.—In coming out into the homestretch each horse must keep the position first selected, except the leading horse, who, when there is sufficient room to pass on the inside, may enter on the homestretch as he can do so. But any horse crossing or overruling in the homestretch so as to impede the progress of a horse behind him, shall not be entitled to win that heat; and if in the opinion of the judges such crossing or overruling was willful on the part of the rider or driver, he shall be punished by suspension, not to exceed one year, for the first offence, and by expulsion for the second.

Shouting, &c.—Any rider or driver guilty of loud shouting, or making other unnecessary noise during the pendency of a heat, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25 for the first offence, and for the second offence by suspension during the meeting at the option of the judges.

Horses Breaking from their Gait.—When any horse or horses break from their gait in trotting or pacing, their riders or drivers shall at once pull them to the gait in which they were to go the race, and any party neglecting or refusing to do so, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $100, or by suspension not exceeding one year.

Protesting without Cause.—Any person found guilty of protesting a horse without cause, or with intent to delay a race, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by suspension not to exceed one year, or by expulsion. This is a capital rule, for it will effectually check the indiscriminate and wholesale protesting against horses in a race made by drivers without any cause or foundation.

Pure or Right Wrongfully Obstructed.—A person obtaining a purse or stake through fraud shall return it to the Treasurer on demand, or be published by expulsion, together with all parties interested, and the horses, until such restitution is made.

Fines.—All fines must be paid on the day they are assessed, or the parties will be subjected to suspension until they are paid in full.

Right of Appeal.—Any owner, rider, driver or trainer who has been subjected to any of the penalties provided by these rules, can appeal from the decision of the judges, to the association upon whose grounds the penalty was the ground, and from their decision to the Board of Appeals, provided they shall do so within one week from the announcement of such decision, and provided also that where the penalty was a fine, it shall have been previously paid to the day of assessment.

The Amended Charter of Flushing.

Last Monday evening an important meeting was held at Flushing in opposition to the amended charter, as proposed by the Board of Village Trustees. The charter, as amended, provides that no all village improvements [illegible] property holders, and the remaining third [illegible] "shall be authorized to [illegible] the village." The clause in Section [illegible] provides that it gives the Trustees authority [illegible] the meeting was a very large one. [illegible] Hall. [illegible]

Rogan, Eighteenth Regiment, Fort Columbus; Fort Adjutant; Lieutenant D. G. Wallace, Forty-fifth Regiment, Recruiting Officer, Brooklyn; Lieutenant A. Fullerton, Forty-third Regiment, Recruiting Officer, Philadelphia; Lieutenant R. E. Bumstead, Fifty-fifth Regiment, Fort Columbus; Acting Quartermaster, Lieutenant Nathaniel Wolfe, Second Artillery, Fort Columbus; Lieutenant Edmund Rice, Fortieth Regiment, Fort Columbus.

The last named officer, Lieutenant Rice, has not as yet reported for duty.

DETACHMENTS FOR THE PLAINS AND ELSEWHERE.

Upwards of one thousand recruits have been sent from this City within the past month, the greater number of whom are now in some frontier doing service on the Plains, and more are soon to follow. Herewith is given a statement of the various detachments that have left the City within the time mentioned, with the names of the officers in charge of the detachments and the regiments to which they have been assigned:

One hundred men, Major G. J. Von Hermann, Third Infantry, Fort Leavenworth. One hundred men, Lieutenant E. C. Henshaw, Third Infantry, Fort Leavenworth. Two hundred men, Major Von Hermann, Captain W. Shields, Lieutenant J. P. Walker, Ninth Infantry, Omaha. One hundred men, Captain Jas. Deshon, Third Artillery, Savannah, Ga. One hundred and fifty men, Captain G. O. Haxty, Lieutenant W. L. Haskins, Third Artillery, Key West. Fifty-one men, Lieutenant R. C. Hewitt, Fifth Artillery, Fort Adams, R. I. Seventy-one men, Lieutenant Von Hermann, Fifth Artillery, Fort Warren, Mass. Thirty-five men, Lieutenant J. P. Walker, Fifth Artillery, Fort Preble, Me. Twenty-one men, Major William Shields, Fifth Artillery, Fort William, Me.

Two hundred men left Fort Columbus yesterday, for Omaha, to join regiments now on duty on the Plains. It is expected that a like number will leave about the 6th of April for Leavenworth.

Performance on the Hudson Steamer City of Boston.

The steamship City of Boston, which left here on Jan. 26 for Liverpool, and concerning whose safety there is some apprehension, took out a number of extra passengers from this City, and crowded at Halifax on the 8th and subsequent added to her passenger list at that port. Those who embarked from New-York were as follows: Mrs. M. Cosgrove, A. C. Morton, Allen Ebbs, wife, child and infant; Mr. Guiquone, J. Whitlow, wife, four children and infant; Mr. Tupper, wife and 4 children; Mrs. M. Prosser, J. McCall, E. P. Archibald, Mrs. Ryland and wife, Mr. J. Cosgrove, James Cosgrove, Mr. Lawden, R. J. McDonald, James McKinnon, John Lovely, Duncan McDonald, W. K. Pitcairn, T. O'Neill. Adults, 27; children, 7.

There was also a number of steerage passengers. Mr. A. C. Morton and Mr. Allan Ebbs, included in the above list, are well known in the mercantile community—the former being President of the Insurance Guaranty Credit and Railway Company, No. 2 Pine-street, and the latter an importer at No. 64 Broome-street.

Destitution in the Fourteenth Ward.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to the fact that a great amount of real destitution exists at present among the poor of the Fourteenth Ward, especially in the neighborhood of Broome, Elizabeth and Mott streets. The teachers of the Fourteenth Ward Industrial School have had cases brought to their notice within a few days past where children have had no food—excepting a slice of bread obtained at the school—for two days, their widowed mothers being on the verge of starvation. Day after day, children who are regular attendants of school come to their teachers and say, "Please, please, teacher, I haven't a home with the baby, and has no fire and nothing to eat." The school is located at No. 416 Elizabeth-street, under the auspices of the Children's Aid Society, and contributions may be either left at the school or sent to the office of the Children's Aid Society, No. 19 East Fourth-street.

Extensive Embezzlement of Letters.

LEWIS MURRAY, one of the porters employed in the Post Office, was charged with embezzlement in the United States Commissioner's office yesterday, on complaint of Special Agent GAYTON. It was alleged that over one hundred letters were found in his possession at the time of his arrest, and that many of the number contained money. It was reported that there was good evidence to believe that Murray had abstracted extensive sums of money during his connection with the Post Office. The accused waived an examination, and was subsequently committed to await the action of the Grand Jury. He previously acknowledged the offence, saying that he expected to be punished and would like to be sent to State Prison as soon as possible. Ten years' imprisonment is the lowest term which he can receive.

Homeless Children for the West.

Mr. J. P. BRACE, one of the Western agents of the Children's Aid Society, left the City yesterday with a large company of homeless and destitute children. The party, which numbered 106, was composed chiefly of orphan boys and girls from 4 to 16 years of age. Many of the boys presented a pitiable appearance as they entered the Secretary's office in the early morning, shivering with cold and accompanied with rags, whose unseemly rents the frosty wind had whistled a kindly welcome to. Divested of these habiliments and attired in bran new suits, the interesting company left in the best of spirits.

National Asylum for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The Board of Managers of the National Asylum for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers give notice that they are now prepared to receive beneficiaries into other branches near Augusta, Me.; Milwaukee, Wis.; or at the Central Asylum, at Dayton, Ohio. Volunteer soldiers are admitted upon application by letter to either of the managers, or at the branch asylum most at their place of residence; whereupon blank applications will be sent to the applicant, and if duly qualified, transportation will be furnished him.

The requirements are:

First—An honorable discharge from the volunteer service.

Second—Disability by wounds received or sickness contracted in the line of duty.

If the applicant is unable to travel, or for other sufficient cause, relief will be furnished under the direction of the manager to whom application is made.

Two-thirds of all almshouses and charity hospitals having disabled soldiers subsisting upon private benefaction, are urged to report such cases to either of the managers, as it is not of that meritorious disabled soldiers of the National Asylum, [illegible] education, religious instruction, and employment are provided for disabled soldiers by the Congress of the United States, to be paid for from the forfeitures and fines of deserters from the army. NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

Another scheme of decentralization of the Executive in France was laid before the Chambers by a Minister yesterday. The debate on domestic policy was resumed, and ended in a vote in favor of the Ministry. The preliminary examination of those arrested during the disturbances in Paris has terminated in the holding of about 275.... The Bishop of Chichester died on Monday, at the age of 94 years.... English engineers have contracted to build 300 miles of railroad in Japan.... The telegraphic difficulties continue in England.... A bill to close shops on Sunday in London was introduced in the House of Lords. It was stated in support of the bill that 10,000 shops were open on Sunday in that city. Those against it said it would deprive working people of recreation.... Several American ecclesiastics have been expelled from Rome, according to a dispatch from Rome.... The Belgian postal authorities forbid the sending of money or valuables by mail.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, the credentials of Messrs. FARROW and WHITLEY as Senators from Georgia were presented by Mr. SEWARD, and a reference to Committee asked. They were objected to on the ground of irregularity, as being commissions from the Governor of Georgia to act as Senators. After some debate the papers were withdrawn. Among the reports from Committees was the bill of Mr. SCHURZ, reported without amendment, to reform the Civil Service, providing for the appointment by the President of a Board of nine Commissioners to prescribe the qualifications of certain office-holders, arranging for competitive examinations, and instituting other measures of reform. Mr. CONKLING delivered a long argument on the subject of the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment, showing the power of States to ratify or reject, and arguing that New-York had no right to reject after once ratifying. He was replied to by Mr. DAVIS. At the close of the latter's speech, the Senate adjourned.

In the House, four members were added to the Committee on Elections so as to make the number fifteen, in accordance with the new rule adopted. Various petitions were presented, and reports from Committees received. Among the latter was a majority report from the Judiciary Committee in the case of Judge BUSZEY, of Alabama, to the effect that the charges against him were not sustained, and did not warrant his impeachment, whereupon the whole matter was tabled. The report of the Conference Committee fixing the appropriations for the naval deficiencies at $6,000,000, was adopted. A resolution was introduced by Mr. DAWES, censuring Mr. MUNSON, of Ohio, for inserting in a recent number of the Globe an undelivered speech, of such a character as to amount to an abuse of the privileges and a violation of the rules of the House. After a long debate, in which the subject of printing undelivered speeches was criticised, the resolution was agreed to. A motion to adjourn in honor of the day was lost, and in Committee of the Whole the Legislative appropriations were again taken up. The amendment appropriating $4,000 for the Bureau of Education, after a long discussion, was adopted. The debate on all items under the head of the Department of the Interior was closed, and thirty-two pages of the bill disposed of. The Committee then rose, and at 6:20 P. M. the House adjourned.

GENERAL.

Further correspondence between the United States and Spanish Governments relating to the "Cuban Question" was submitted to Congress yesterday. It contains the letter to the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs in which General SICKLES withdraws the celebrated note [illegible] the reply of Senor SILVELA, and a letter from the Consul-General at Santiago de Cuba on the condition of political affairs in the island.

The telegraphic dispatches this morning contain additional evidence of the extreme severity with which the cholera prevailed in the Mississippi Valley last week. The first case, WALTER MARSHALL, passed in the hearse endeavor to save the life of a lady.

The Judiciary Committee of the Virginia House of Representatives reported a resolution declaring that a second resolution of the Richmond and Petersburg Association be unnecessary, which was adopted yesterday.

The funeral mill of AUSTIN & TAYLOR, North Saxton, Vt., was burned on Saturday. Loss $20,000; partially insured in Boston offices.

A Halifax dispatch says that a feeling of gloom prevails there on account of the possible fate of the steamer City of Boston. A British steam ship which left there for Liverpool five days before the steamer has arrived at her destination, and reports having experienced rough weather.

A Pembina letter of Feb. 10, says Governor MCTAVISH and other prominent officers of the Hudson Bay Company had been imprisoned by RIELLE, the leader of the revolt, for endeavoring to tamper with members of the Provisional Government in order to defeat the Bill of Rights.

The Republican State Convention of Illinois met yesterday at Indianapolis, and renominated the present State officers with a few exceptions. One of the Vice-Presidents of the Convention was a colored man.

M. C. HAMILTON and Lieutenant-Governor FLANAGAN, of Texas, were elected United States Senators by the Texas Legislature yesterday.

The Captain of an American fishing smack, while at Havana, was yesterday beset in his vessel by a mob in train who threatened his life, on account of supposed aid extended to Cubans. He escaped to a British man-of-war, and his persecutors gave up the pursuit. Several of them were arrested at the instigation of the American Consul-General.

LOCAL.

JAMES COURTNEY, of No. 659 East Twenty-second-street, was shot in the back of the head yesterday, while conversing with his wife, by JOHN CROWE, of No. 22 East Twenty-fourth-street. The wound is not dangerous. CROWE was arrested by the Eighteenth Precinct Police, and failed to assign any motive for his willful use of the pistol.

The examination in regard to the criminal charge made against MARTIN R. CONX, a wholesale liquor dealer, by Collector BAILEY, was continued yesterday.

The Alumni of Williams' College gave their annual reunion dinner at St. James Hotel, last evening. The address of the occasion was delivered by WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT, Esq., who responded to the toast "Letters." Many prominent gentlemen, graduates of the College, and others, were present.

SAMUEL J. WILDERS, one of the defendants in the alleged Fullerton conspiracy, appeared before Commissioner STILLWELL yesterday for the purpose of giving additional bail in the sum of $2,000, to appear before the United States Circuit Court on Tuesday next, at which time the case is expected to come on for trial.

P. B. EMMONS, claiming to be an agent for the sale of Hostile Counterfeit Government Detector, was arrested yesterday on a charge of having attempted to pass a bad ten dollar bill on a druggist. Over one hundred dollars' worth of spurious money was found in his possession.

A Post Office porter named Louis MURRAY was held for examination in the United States Commissioners' office yesterday, on a charge of having unbolted numerous money letters. Under cover of his official position, he admitted the accusation.

A burglar named CHARLES WILLIAMS was sent to State Prison for five years, by Recorder HACKETT, in the Court of General Sessions yesterday.

The Sale of Cadetships.

The evidence taken in the case of Mr. WHITTEMORE, one of the members from South Carolina, leaves no room for doubt that the traffic in West Point Cadetships has grown into a settled system. Mr. WHITTEMORE himself appears to have thought that there was nothing wrong in bartering away a privilege which was conferred upon members of Congress for very different purposes. The original idea was that members of Congress would single out the most eligible and promising candidates for the future military and naval service of the country. We may be quite sure that it was never contemplated that Representatives would degrade themselves by selling the appointments to the highest bidder. This, however, is what seems to have become a common practice—all our hopes to the contrary being scattered by recent disclosures. Some members of the House have evidently been in the habit of selling cadetships just as if there was no dishonor involved in the transaction. Mr. WHITTEMORE did it without much reserve. To be sure he declined, as he says, taking money for the appointment until the offer was made with delicacy. In one case $500 was to be given for the relief of the poor in his district. In another case the money was to be appropriated towards defraying the expenses of his political campaign. The bargain comes to precisely the same thing, by whatever name Mr. WHITTEMORE or his friends choose to call it, or whatever motive they assign for it. Mr. WHITTEMORE sold what was really not his own to sell. In his case the offence may morally amount to nothing more than a serious indiscretion. We may assume that from his past life. He has been much respected—was a chaplain in a Massachusetts regiment during the war, and in every way a man free from reproach. But if he goes unpunished, what is to be said of any other cases that may come to light? There is very little doubt that it will be possible to make out some sort of defence for each culprit who is discovered. It is impossible to make an example of one and let others go unscathed. Mr. WHITTEMORE ought to be expelled the House, harsh as that measure undoubtedly appears, and harshly as it was urged by General LOGAN.

It is too probable that some of the members who have gone into this nefarious trade will not be slow to make as good a "show" for their characters as Mr. WHITTEMORE. That gentleman declares positively that the sale of his cadetships had been of no pecuniary advantage to him from beginning to end. Some of his colleagues, who have likewise forgotten the duty they owe to their country, have gone about the work in a different spirit. According to all accounts, Mr. LOGAN'S Committee is in possession of facts which tell with fatal force against several members who have hitherto been unsuspected. What will be their defence? That there is nothing wrong in selling appointments which ought to be distributed under a very high sense of duty and responsibility? Scarcely that, unless the trafficker happens to have his moral sensibilities very much confused. To assist the poor, to give obscure young men a chance in life, to enable the young and very worthy candidate to the Academy to prepare for the ordeal which it was supposed would be conducted by giving to Congressmen the right to choose cadets. How does one fit be said that there is no impropriety in selling these appointments and pocketing the money? A murderer may almost as well sell his vote at once.

Mr. WHITTEMORE will be the first sufferer, but it seems too certain that he will soon have companions in misfortune. By the precedent established in this one case, all subsequent cases will have to be decided. We admit again that General LOGAN proceed with great severity upon Mr. WHITTEMORE. Everybody must see that, when it is stated that even General BUTLER interposed for clemency. The prosecutor must be very relentless when Mr. BUTLER is found entreating him to give a little time. Mr. WHITTEMORE has through this strange and almost unnatural intervention, obtained a sort of reprieve until to-day. This ought to be the last day of his Congressional career. It is unpleasant to pronounce so severe a judgment—but the public interests are of more importance than the comfort of individuals. After Mr. WHITTEMORE, let us have the others brought up for judgment. A stop must be put to this scandal. No matter who the seller of cadetships may be, let us have him first exposed, and then have him turned out of Congress. If that work is carried on with strict impartiality,—no man, whatever his politics may be, being favored above another,—we shall soon hear the last of the traffic in cadetships. In the first case which has been brought to light the Republicans cannot be accused of acting from party motives. Mr. WHITTEMORE, as we have intimated, is a staunch Republican. He served in the Fifty-third and Thirtieth Massachusetts Volunteers as chaplain. After the war he went to South Carolina and edited a Republican paper. The official record tells us that "he was one of the pioneers of the Republican Party, and Chairman of the Republican Executive State Central Committee, until the State of South Carolina was fully restored to the Union." In almost every way he seems to be a worthy man; more is the pity to find him concerned in a traffic for which expulsion from Congress is the only adequate penalty.

The Radical Conspiracy and the Kentucky Colored Vote.

Kentucky Democrats seem to be bent on accepting the Fifteenth Amendment with the worst possible grace. Instead of following the World's advice to substitute craft for force, and to formally adopt the policy of duplicity and fraud, they tear off the mask, show their hands, and drive the colored vote straight into the Republican ranks.

Doubtless, this Moloch-like policy of "open war," which despises a device "less unexpert," springs from the consciousness of strength. The vast Democratic majority in Kentucky, and the unbroken array of its State representation in Congress, make the party haughty, uncompromising and relentless. Their schemes are at once high-handed and presumptuous. Kuklux outrages still awe the colored people and their white defenders. The testimony of blacks is still barred by legislation from the Courts. The "Kentucky Bourbons" lose no chance of exasperating the negroes on one hand and exposing them to murder and plunder on the other. To crown all, the Legislature, anticipating the proclamation of the passage of the Fifteenth Amendment, is considering the propriety of subjecting voters to a property qualification.

Meanwhile, political trickery is invoked to perpetuate Democratic rule. The party is crowding all offices full of Democrats, bringing on elections prematurely, and extending the terms of offices held by Democrats. It seems to have thrown away the scabbard, and proclaimed war to the hilt with the colored voters, in defiance of the "conciliatory counsel" recommended by Northern allies. The spicy address of the Republican Executive Committee in the Seventh Congressional District tells us what the Democracy did in Lexington. On the 19th of January last, the Democracy held a primary election there, and nominated candidates for the regular annual city election in March. But Congressman BECK telegraphed just then that the new Fifteenth Amendment would be in force by the 1st of March, whereupon the caucus went post haste to the Legislature, and got the City Charter amended so as to ante-date the election to January, increase salaries and lengthen the terms of office from one to three—all through fear of the coming colored vote. So again, in Winchester, the town election has been held in June since the founding thereof; but in similar dread and distrust of the Fifteenth Amendment, the Legislature ante-dated the election this year by four months, changed certain elective offices to appointive offices, and created a four-years Board of Trustees for filling them.

These are but specimens of the rule-or-ruin policy of the Kuklux Kentucky Democracy. To what a stress must so-called Democracy be driven, when it becomes the party distinctively opposed to free suffrage among free men? While the Chicago Times argues in behalf of an "educational qualification," the Kentucky Legislature enforces "property qualifications." These are the sheet-anchors against suffrage which a party claiming to be Jeffersonian and Jacksonian throw out. The address just alluded to refers with just contempt to this "change of front," and says:

"The edition of that great book—Webster's Dictionary (issued before the rebellion)—defined a Democrat to be 'One who believes in a government by the people, on divers the extension of suffrage to all classes of men.'"

This backing and filling, this dodging and ducking to escape the Fifteenth Amendment, is fruitless. The ostrich that hides its head in the sand to escape its pursuers, is not more stupid. Suppose these elections be ante-dated, and terms of office be stretched from one year to three or four—what then? How will it be in four years or five? The colored man will vote, and vote independently, and they will have power behind the ballot to protect their vote for a year or two. They will vote strongly and politely against the Democratic Party.

We are inclined to think that Kentucky, which has seemed to be the special stronghold of the Democracy, has parted the party rule by its own greediness. The State, to be sure, will probably be Democratic, as a whole, for years to come; but we incline to think, with the Detroit Advertiser, that the Republicans will have a good chance hereafter of carrying the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth Congressional Districts, with a fair show in the Second and Third. And this is not all that the Kentucky Democracy will accomplish by their Bourbon-like policy, as may perhaps be seen, if Congress finds it necessary to legislate for "carrying into full effect" the provisions of the Fifteenth Amendment.

The Case of Georgia.

There are two sides to the Georgia question. One of them we attempted to present the other day in discussing the position of the question in the Congressional sense. The other is set forth this morning in a letter by Mr. CALDWELL—one of the small band of Republicans who dispute the legality of the course pursued by General TERRY, and propose to unstitch all that has been accomplished under the act "to perfect the reconstruction" of the State. So far as the contest relates to the affairs of the party within the State, we have no inclination to interfere. But having assisted Congress in reopening and completing its work, we are concerned as to the strength of the ground on which that action was based; and we desire that what was intended to perfect reconstruction shall not be thwarted by those who, though in the past Republicans, are now playing the game of the malcontent Democracy.

Mr. CALDWELL'S argument, if it amount to anything, is an arraignment of the policy upon which Congress acted last December. Whether the Legislature which the law then enacted pronounced provisional was unlawfully organized, as we maintain, or lawfully organized, as our correspondent alleges, is the point on which the whole proceedings of Congress in this matter turns. With regard to that aspect of the subject we simply give Mr. CALDWELL a hearing. To follow his statements in detail would be to renew a controversy which the latest effort at reconstruction was desired to close. This, however, seems clear; if the organization of the Legislature was not complete and satisfactory, as the law by an obvious inference affirms, that body was not competent to select United States Senators. Such an exercise of power implies perfect legality in the existence and proceedings of the body exercising it; and the fact that Congress declared it to be merely provisional, and treated it as still subject to the authority of the District Commander, is the strongest evidence against the validity of the title by which Messrs. HILL and MILLER claim to be Senators.

We are assured by Mr. CALDWELL that if this view of the question prevails, "it will become a question for the whole American people to consider in regard to its nature, its history and its consequences." Something of this sort has been heard many times before—always, however, from Democratic sources, and in relation to the entire scheme of reconstruction. It is because Mr. CALDWELL'S allegations indirectly impugn the principle on which the General Government has proceeded in readjusting the affairs of the Southern States, that they are not likely to possess much weight at Washington.

Justice for our Needy Veterans.

General SHERMAN touched the key-note at the meeting in behalf of our disabled soldiers when he declared that "it is not a charity,—it is a national compact;" and, therefore, he felt "somewhat astonished and a little hurt, as a soldier," to find that soldiers maimed and wounded and thrown upon the charity of the great State of New-York have been sent to Blackwell's Island. He declared that when our soldiers first moved to the front in the late war the nation agreed, by universal voice, to care for them. And was it not so in 1861? When the citizen-soldiery of the country marched to meet the first brunt of battle in Kentucky and Virginia, in Maryland and Missouri, surely we all agreed that the least we could do for those that should fall was to pledge liberal support to the widow and fatherless, and the least for those who should return crippled and war-worn was to give them comforts and honors. On the faith of these myriad pledges, repeated on the platform, through the Press, in the pulpit, soldiers went forward to battle, taking no thought for the morrow, and trustfully leaving their future to the care of their countrymen. It is a "compact" we have made,—a compact of honor and gratitude as binding as if signed and sealed. It is a "sacred debt, still due," said Mr. PETER COOPER, adding that we must not allow those who have lost their limbs in battle any longer to "beg bitter bread from the cold hand of charity," and that "through realms their valor saved." These soldiers have fairly earned, as Mr. BECCHER says, "by opposing their breasts to the bayonets of the foe, the right to their own share for the rest of their lives."

We will remember one sentiment which was almost universal eight or nine years ago—it was that a man who should fight bravely for his country would really have done the main duty of a lifetime, and would have earned his degree of Exactus. We regarded the soldiers who met the shock of arms as accepting the chances of death for the country, and if fortune should spare their lives, they, we said, would none the less have "won glory enough," and "done duty enough." But nations are apt to forget, and once freed from the stress of peril, to undervalue it. Such a meeting as the one held at Cooper Institute on Monday evening, is useful in stirring up our minds to remembrance. "The wounded, disabled, and impoverished soldiers of our war for the Union are dropping away from us day by day," say the resolutions, "as the withered leaves fall in Autumn." Very soon the "compact of charity" can hardly be fulfilled, for many who [illegible] the meeting took, was that of an appeal to the Legislature for the establishment of a permanent Home for Disabled Soldiers and Sailors, "worthy of the patriotism, the wealth, the humanity and the justice of the State of New-York." We cordially handle the sad and distressed fellow-citizens which have been brought back from the wars, struggling with fatigue and lacerated by the splinters of shell and the fangs and mouths of cannon. We lay up the battered hulks of naval victory in a proud memento of their patriotism. Here, however, at our doors, are the men who carried those hulks, not less battered and torn by service, and hourly splintered by hostile bullets; and here are the hulks of humanity, wrecked by the war for all possibility of great service for themselves or for us henceforth, but claiming by their scars that as they cared for us we shall now care for them.

The Steamship "City of Boston."

The fate of this fine vessel of the Inman line is still in suspense. She left this port on the 20th of January, and three days afterwards she passed Holyhead, since which time nothing has been heard from her. She was due in Liverpool on the 6th inst., and is therefore, eighteen days late. All the great transatlantic lines have their own tracks as distinctly charted down and separated as if they were rival railways. The Inman track, after leaving Cape Race, curves considerably towards the north, and runs in higher latitude than any other of the main sea-tracks, except that of the Glasgow steamers. The City of Boston, if disabled, whether by accident to her machinery, or by a gale, would be in a part of the Atlantic whence escape must be very slow. At this season of the year the Gulf Stream, as is well known, crosses the ocean at a lower parallel of latitude than in Summer; its northern edge being, according to MAURY and others, five hundred miles south of the Inman track. The disabled ship, therefore, would probably be in a part of the sea where she would find but little if any current to drift her either towards the Irish coast or towards the Azores. The winds of the North Atlantic are sharply to the west, south of the Inman track; and if the City of Boston were on the Brest or Bremen line route, under ordinary circumstances, with neither steam, sail nor helm, she might, in a few weeks, float safely to the Azores. In consequence of the high latitude followed by her master, she is now probably out of the drift or eastward recurvation of the Gulf Stream washing these Western islands. The indications, both in Europe and here, are strongly in support of the belief that the usually westerly winds have been considerably modified during the past Winter, and the steamship thus subjected to still greater delay.

The season is somewhat early for icebergs, but the abnormal tropical blasts we have had until lately, and which have been traced on the American coast beyond the Camden, may have begun the work of dislodging the ice masses on the southern coasts of Greenland. The incidents of the loss of the San Francisco, a few years ago, are perhaps fresh in the public mind. That vessel, after foundering on Christmas Day, was so lost sight of by the ship Three Bells,—which faithfully stood by her—that not a fragment of the wreck was visible to tell where she had drifted, until the 6th of January following, when her spars and rigging were found not over 500 miles east from the scene of the disaster. At this rate of motion, in the very axis of the Gulf Stream where the San Francisco went down, supposing the now missing steamer to be helpless, she may be out yet forty days before she can reach the coasts of Europe, and nearly as long in drifting to the Azores. If we remember rightly, it was the Atlantic, of the Collins line, that, a few years ago, on her trip to England, becoming disabled and uncontrollable by accident when a few days out from Newfoundland, was nearly sixty days in drifting to these islands. Fortunately the City of Boston has on board over eighty days' provisions. It is deemed not improbable that she is moving towards the Bay of Biscay; and it may not be too late for the Inman Company to telegraph for vessels to be dispatched in search of her there and elsewhere.

Poor TOWNSEND'S murderer, JOHN REYNOLDS, was yesterday found guilty of murder in the first degree, and will this morning be sentenced. The case was so positive that its interest centered in the attempt of the prisoner's counsel to absolve him of moral responsibility for the act. But there was not even a decent pretext for the plea. The medical witnesses called in his behalf, on cross-examination, pronounced him sane. Now let Judge DONOHUE do his duty,—and we are sure he will,—and the fate of REYNOLDS may teach others of his class that hanging is not yet "played out," even in New-York.

The French Cable Company is guilty of misrepresentation when it speaks of the "retrospective character of the American policy" in regard to it. There could have been no clearer understanding than that under which the landing of this end of the cable was permitted. That permission was only temporary, and its continuance depended upon the disposition of the French Government to allow the privileges usual in such cases. The Company undertook to endeavor to secure those privileges, and the Emperor's representative at Washington used his influence in the same direction. But there was not the least concession gained on, grounds of the patience manifested on this side. If the whole subject assumed a new aspect at this late period, who is to blame? If there is bad faith, it rests with the French Government, which allowed an enterprise to proceed in expectation of imperial concessions which were ultimately, and when the cable had commenced work, coldly refused.

It was quite time that the stupid system of printing undelivered speeches in the Congressional Globe came to an end. It is bad enough to allow Representatives to read essays of enormous length in the House, and afterwards have them printed at the public expense. But to let any man stir his carcass in type without even going through the form of submitting his rubbish to the House, is a mere donation, and Congress [illegible] Newport, a Democratic town that [illegible] Mr. Newport, the Democratic Prime Minister, has [illegible] "a very quiet, indecent and unmanly memory attack" upon the President and Cabinet in the state. We might as stand Mr. Newport. We have no doubt his "envy" is not much worse than many others which have stood adjacent to the throne in the more aristocratic manner. The clerks in the Department of Congress, and some day it will be cause of disgusting, and the work of reporting speeches by hand is ordinary newspaper enterprise.

We cannot suppose that the inhabitants of Brooklyn prefer to drink the horrible liquid they now be "sold milk" rather than the genuine article, although Police Justice BOOKLEY seems to have come to the conclusion that they do. The revelations which have been made with respect to the carrying from Kirkpatrick, Brooklyn, milk is derived are enough to shake any confidence. It is clearly shown that Brooklyn milk contains the elements of cheese and death, and that it is manufactured from cows afflicted with the most pulmonary complaints. Brooklyn milk and Jersey whisky will hereafter be known as the great poisons of the nineteenth century. Mr. Brown has tried to show up the milk dealers, but Justice BOOKLEY stops out his state dealers. The milk dealers have in consequence got off most free. Have the Brooklyn people nothing to say to this arrangement? We hope Mr. BEECHER will still endeavor to prevent their destroying their children by using the infamous mixture sold in the city under the name of milk. Could he not prevail upon Justice BOOKLEY to drink a pint or two of the stuff?

Our contemporaries in all parts of the country are criticising the World's attitude against the "Ring" somewhat in this spirit: The charges are loose and vague. If the World is really sincere, why does it not be more direct in its assaults? There is a great deal of force in these representations. To take only one instance—the World has admitted that a section of its own party has set up Judges in our Court Houses, "to sell injustice for a price." Upon this it was asked to name the Judges to whom it referred. But the World could not thus be brought to close quarters. And yet nothing injures the prestige of the Democratic Party so much as the scandals which a few Judges have brought upon the Judiciary. This is one of the very first evils which the World must reform if it would restore its party to public favor. Once more, then, shall we invite the World to speak out plainly, and tell us which of the Judges it had in mind when denouncing the deliberate sale of justice?

Since the days of HORACE, who was so hard on the miser, that class of people have always been in bad odor with their fellow men; and we have one more instance of this in the case of Mr. RYDER, of Dutchess County, N. Y., who, having lived for twenty years or so very much like a hermit, has been declared insane by a Commission of Lunacy Inquiry, at Washington. The verdict is rather hard on the close-fisted old gentleman, even though he did keep his roll of bills in the crown of his hat, and usually wore dirty shirts. It was shown that he was sharp in his dealings, and had a keen eye to the main chance; and though we are not the Supreme Court, we may venture the opinion that he is insane only in a Horatian sense, and knows a hawk from a handsaw as well as any other grandfather in Dutchess County. With a good shave occasionally, and the amenity of a clean shirt, things which society has a right to expect, he has evidently will enough to test him for the short remainder of his life, since he is now over 70.

A petition to Congress, which has been prepared for signature by the Alabama claimants, asks for a mercantile Commission to examine and determine the amount of loss by citizens of the United States, and with authority to issue certificates of the amounts of losses, giving particulars. The main purpose of these certificates seems to be that they are to be of the nature of negotiable securities, forming, as it is asked that they shall, the basis of distribution to the holders in case of a settlement with Great Britain. It is difficult to see, however, how the certificates can be of any use, unless the Government guarantees them, on the ground that it has assumed the responsibility of negotiating or forcing the payment of the claims. But the petitioners do not altogether wish that the question of settlement should be strictly a national one—that is, while they seek redress through Government effort, they do not wish to relinquish control over the measure of relief to be demanded; and still less do they admit the right to set off their claims by counter demands. The proper way, after all, is to let the matter remain in the State Department, where it belongs, and the amounts and methods of distribution can come afterwards into consideration.

The death of Mrs. CASSIDY ought to be another caution to medical men, especially in hospitals and dispensaries, in reference to the use of chloroform. This poor woman went to a dispensary in Brooklyn, and applied for surgical treatment of a dislocated arm. After pulling at the arm for some time without doing any good, one of the doctors administered chloroform. This settled the case at once. Poor MARY CASSIDY became a little boisterous and kicked; then another dose was given to her. She fell off into a sleep, and the doctors managed to set the arm. But by that time the arm was of no further use to the patient—she was dead. All attempts to restore animation failed. It is an unfortunate occurrence, by no means standing alone in medical annals. The use of chloroform is known to be attended with risks. But there are anæsthetic agents which are not so dangerous—some which are not dangerous at all. How is it that these are not oftener employed? Perhaps there may be a good reason, and if so the public would like to become acquainted with it.

A little incident worth noticing took place in the House of Commons on the first night of the session. Mr. DISRAELI, the "best conservative man in England," took occasion to refer to the course pursued by the United States Government in reference to Fenianism. He said, "We should be glad to admit and proud to remember that it can never be said of the American Republic that it for a moment winked, connived, or encouraged the Fenian conspiracy." This remark was received with cheers and "some murmuring"—many members being more willing to hear the American Government blamed than praised. Upon this manifestation of disapproval, Mr. DISRAELI said: "I speak only as far as my experience extends, but to that extent I say that the conduct of the American Government was marked by a spirit of order and the utmost political integrity." The remarkable words elicited. When the chosen leader of the English chiefs of Mr. DISRAELI's party in this country, it ought to be remembered that he, unlike most Liberal statesmen, never said [illegible] ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ...

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

A Quiet Anniversary—Parade of the Eleventh Regiment—Festivals of the Sons of Temperance—Other Celebrations.

The one hundred and thirty-eighth anniversary of the birth of WASHINGTON was very quietly observed in this City yesterday. The extreme cold which set in on Sunday night, and continued throughout yesterday, was sufficient to keep pleasure-seekers out of the streets, excepting such as had business to transact, and, as the stores generally were open, the day presented but little of a holiday aspect. Even those sanguine and long suffering people who congregate on the steps of the City Hall on every holiday, with a wild and dreamy idea that being a holiday, there must be a parade, were comparatively few in number. The dust and biting west wind were too much even for them, and so soon as the Eleventh Regiment had passed—the only one that honored itself and the day by parading—the crowd dispersed with wonderful celerity.

The morning was ushered in by the chimes of Old Trinity. At 11 o'clock a full choral service was performed in the church, and at noon Mr. JAMES ANDREWS rang a number of pleasing changes on eight bells, including, of course, "Yankee Doodle," "Hail Columbia" and "Viva L'America." The temperature was too frigid, however, to permit people to stand in the street to listen to the music of the bells, whose sweetness was wasted, therefore, in a great measure, on empty air.

All the General and City Government bureaus were closed. The Post Office and Custom House remained open till 10 A. M., when they, too, closed their doors. The Courts were generally closed. Judges BARNARD and CARDOZO, however, kept theirs open, the former judicial dignitary giving as a reason for so doing that, as no one observed his birthday, he was not bound to observe WASHINGTON'S.

The flags on the City Hall and other public buildings, as well as on many private ones, were hoisted at early morning, and fluttered throughout the day in the clear, cold and biting air.

PARADE OF THE ELEVENTH REGIMENT.

The Eleventh Regiment, Washington Rifles, made their annual parade yesterday afternoon, in celebration of the birthday of WASHINGTON and the date of their organization. The command made a splendid appearance, despite the fact that the overcoats worn by the men concealed their handsome uniforms. After forming in Great Jones-street at 2 P. M., the regiment marched down Broadway to the City Hall, where it was formally reviewed by Mayor HALL. Subsequently the Eleventh made an extended parade, and was dismissed at its Armory. There was no other military parade made yesterday. The usual salutes were fired at sunrise and noon.

THE VETERANS OF 1812.

The Veterans did not parade yesterday. About 2 P. M. they assembled at Military Hall, in the Bowery, in citizens' dress, and partook at their own expense of a dinner washed down with lager beer, which smoked them into a hot Fourth of July glow. Speeches and toasts were made. At present there are only about thirty-five of them who are able to turn out. There are about twenty others who are too infirm to leave their homes. In 1860 they numbered 300 strong, and three years ago seventy of them sat down to dinner on the Fourth of July. Every year makes sad inroads on their numbers, and as every annual mustering some poor fellow is found to have lost the number of his mess. General RAYMOND still appears to be as hale and hearty as he was a dozen years ago, with the exception that he has been nearly deprived of the use of his lower limbs, by an accident which occurred to him while coming by rail from Washington. Many of the veterans speak with considerable bitterness of the neglect which they experience. Said an old gentleman yesterday: "If we had not fought in 1812, there would have been no country to fight for in 1861."

AT THE COOPER UNION.

The celebration of Washington's Birthday by the pupils of the Cooper Union took place last evening at the large hall of the Institute. The spacious building was taxed to its utmost capacity to contain one of the largest audiences ever assembled within its walls—a tribute so long to the genius and patriotism of WASHINGTON that to the munificence and philanthropy of the founder of that institution which Americans delight to call national. The platform and body of the hall were hung with national flags and emblems, and the spirit of the festival, and a general anxiety for its successful outcome, was clearly observable. At 8 o'clock Mr. PETER COOPER, whose appearance was hailed with enthusiastic cheering, opened the proceedings. Rev. Mr. JACKSON, on offering prayer, happily adverted to the generosity and the management of the Institute by its founder, and the opportunities it afforded the general public in affording a first-class entertainment. The programme consisted of a series of literary essays and orations, and they delivery favorably impressed all with the excellence of the assistance given to public education by the Free Academy of Cooper Union, and drew frequent and continued bursts of applause. Professor J. R. FROBISHER read selections from WASHINGTON'S Farewell Address—the embodiment of the great principles of freedom and republicanism—with considerable force, and his efforts were cordially acknowledged. Mr. O. L. PERRY delivered an excellent essay on "The Influence of Education," with a vein of sound sense that was deservedly cheered. Recitations were delivered by Messrs. J. GOFF, (Gratitude,) J. J. CAROLAN, (Political Despotism,) T. DUFFY, (Progress,) and C. W. CURTIS, (The American Flag.) E. E. DONYOUNEY's excellent band was in attendance, and discoursed the choicest selection of national airs. At the conclusion of the proceedings three cheers were called for WASHINGTON and Mr. PETER COOPER, which were heartily responded to.

AT THE ALANSON M. E. SUNDAY SCHOOL.

WASHINGTON'S birthday was celebrated last evening by the members of the Alanson M. E. Sunday School, at the Methodist Episcopal Church, North-street. The proceedings were in the form of a social, which took place at 9 o'clock, but long before that hour every portion of the church was filled to overflowing by an immense audience, and hundreds who arrived at a later hour found it utterly impossible to gain admittance. The church was tastefully decorated for the occasion, and a number of religious and national mottoes gracefully suspended from the walls and pillars. The pupils of the Sunday School to the number of three hundred occupied a position on an elevated dais at the front of the church, and their appearance attracted universal interest and remained for the entire moment. It would be impossible to convey an adequate idea of the performance of a programme which was remarkable for its variety, in a brief notice, especially where all acquitted themselves creditably. Miss ANNA JOHNSTON and Miss HOUTON, however, received the most marked favor and their rendering of several difficult pieces drew down great applause. Professor FROBISHER presided at the piano. The entertainment will be repeated this evening with a change of programme.

The Day in Brooklyn.

Public business was generally suspended in Brooklyn yesterday in honor of WASHINGTON'S birthday. No special demonstration was made to mark the anniversary. In the evening a distribution of prizes took place at the Brooklyn Institute, and various lectures and tea meetings were held. In honor of WASHINGTON'S birthday all the vessels and buildings at the Navy Yard were covered with flags, and at noon the national salute of twenty-one guns was fired from the battery in the yard. The gunboat Seminole, that arrived at the yard a few days since from the West Indies, is ordered to go out of commission to-day. On her way home the two surgeons and five men of the crew died of yellow fever.

The Day in Newark.

The day was celebrated in Newark in a very creditable manner. At sunrise the first salute was fired on Military Park, which was followed by salutes at noon and sunset in front of the County House and on Lincoln Park respectively. The First, Second and Fifth Regiments of the New-Jersey National Guard paraded through the principal streets, under the command of General PLUME. Business was suspended in the various Government offices, public schools, &c., and the display of bunting was very general. Most of the stores were also closed, and the citizens found ample opportunities for amusement and entertainment in the various halls, churches, and Opera House.

In Jersey City, Elizabeth and the suburbs, the day was not characterized by any noticeable display, and beyond the occasional waving of the national flag and a temporary suspension of business, nothing was observable to denote the character of the day.

The Day in Westchester County.

The Sons and Daughters of Temperance residing in the lower part of Westchester County, assembled at Mount Vernon yesterday, to celebrate WASHINGTON'S birthday under the auspices of Mount Vernon Division Sons of Temperance No. 18. White Plains Division No. 226; Tuckahoe Division No. 262; Mosholu Division No. 268; Morrisania Division No. 317; Crystal Stream Division No. 81, of Mott Haven; Crystal Spring Division No. 86, of Melrose; Ismanthe Division No. 156, of Yonkers; Yonkers Division No. 94, and Westchester Division No. 224 were well represented, considering the severity of the cold. The exercises commenced at 2 o'clock in the Methodist Episcopal Church, where the G. W. F. STEPHEN MERRITT, Jr., and Rev. T. T. KENRICKS, of New-York, delivered appropriate and very effective addresses. The celebration wound up with a social tea at the Union Hall.

The Day Across the Sleeve.

The observance of the anniversary of WASHINGTON'S birthday has been more general in towns on the Hudson River than heretofore. At Poughkeepsie the Temperance people celebrated the day. Dutchess No. 8, fitted by Flockton's Band, paraded the streets, returning up at Collingwood Opera House, where Rev. G. M. McENROE made a temperance speech, while Flockton's Band and a glee club furnished good music. The banks of the city were closed, and flags were displayed on public buildings. At Wappinger's Falls the firemen observed the day with a parade, dinner, toasts, speeches, &c. At noon an excess train of nine cars left Fishkill Landing for Pine Plains over the Dutchess and Columbia Railroad. Every car was filled with pleasure-seeking hundreds of Rhinebeckers, Hudsonites, Ghent, and the German Colony of Newburg, and Poughkeepsie participating. When the train reached Pine Plains the excursionists repaired to Decker's Hotel, where dinner was had, and then followed by orators by Judge GEORGE, of Ocean County. Remarks were also made by Gen. H. BROWN, President of the Dutchess and Columbia Railroad; ROSWELL G. RANKIN, Esq., of Newburg; and Councilman WEBER, Member of Poughkeepsie Common Council also made addresses. At a late hour all returned to the depot and took passage for home, well pleased with the trip.

Observance of the Day Throughout the Country.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 22.—The Custom House, banks and all the leading places of business are closed to-day.

HARTFORD, Feb. 22.—WASHINGTON'S birthday was observed as a holiday at Trinity College. In the evening the students assembled and listened to an oration and poem, and afterwards indulged in a collation and dance.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Feb. 22.—WASHINGTON'S birthday anniversary was observed today by a military parade. The banks were closed, flags were displayed and salutes fired at noon.

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 22.—The anniversary of WASHINGTON'S birthday was celebrated here today by parades of the Twenty-fifth Regiment and the Washington Continentals, Company B.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 22.—WASHINGTON'S birthday is celebrated with unusual spirit. A salute was fired at daylight; the firemen made a grand parade, proceeding to Old Ducks Cemetery to dedicate a monument to their late Chief Engineer Lyle.

BALTIMORE, Md., Feb. 22.—The banks and all public buildings are closed to-day. No business will be transacted on Change. There is a general display of flags from public and private buildings.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Departments are all closed in honor of WASHINGTON'S birthday and private business is generally suspended. The Supreme Court, the United States and the District Courts have adjourned over in honor of the day. The banks and all schools are closed.

FORTRESS MONROE, Va., Feb. 22.—A national salute was fired from the fortress at noon to-day.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 22.—WASHINGTON'S birthday passed off very quietly, no public demonstrations of any kind being made.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 22.—The Democratic meeting this afternoon adopted a resolution declaring the Democracy revere the memory of WASHINGTON. Aside from this meeting and a few feeble attempts at public holidays, no notice was taken of WASHINGTON'S birthday.

MOBILE, Ala., Feb. 22.—The public buildings are closed and business is generally suspended in observance of the day.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 21.—Business will be suspended to-morrow, and the various public offices will be closed.

AMUSEMENTS.

GERMAN OPERA AT THE ACADEMY.

A performance of "Der Freischütz" admirable for its heartiness and most satisfactory in respect of fidelity of execution, was given at the Academy of Music last evening, by the members of the Arion Society, with the assistance of Mme. PARepa-ROSA and Mlle. CANISSA. Mr. WILLIAM CANDIDUS represented Max, Mr. F. REMMERTZ, Caspar, Mr. GEORGE ELY Kilian, and Messrs. REDDER, DERNOFF and ARPTLAUER the remaining male characters, the associates of these gentlemen constituting the largest portion of the chorus. Mr. CANDIDUS whose voice is a light tenor of sympathetic quality, sang with good taste, and made no very earnest endeavor to act. Mr. REMMERTZ added to a thorough command of his vocal resources a fair acquaintance with the business of the stage. The success of the night, however, was for Mme. PARepa-ROSA who, coming from Baltimore, reached this City late in the afternoon, and, without a preliminary rehearsal, sang Agatha in German with unswerving accuracy as to notes, and absolute fluency and faultlessness of pronunciation as to words. Aennchen was interpreted with piquancy by Mlle. CANISSA. The choruses were of course given with great effect, and the hunters' ensemble in the last act was honored by a commanded repeat. The orchestra was under the baton of Mr. CARL BERGMANN. The house was crowded.

ITALIAN OPERA.

"Robert le Diable" is to be sung at the Academy of Music to-night, with Signori LEFRANC and STORTI, and Misses KELLOGG and JACKSON in the leading parts.

MR. FECHTER IN BOSTON.

Monday evening, Mr. FECHTER acted in "Hamlet" at the Boston Theatre. The morning papers of Boston refer to his performance at some length. The Post says: "Mr. FECHTER, it is quite safe to assert, has played to no such audience in America. New-York gave him numbers—Boston gave him brains. New-York awarded to him dress—Boston paid him the compliment of intelligence and discrimination. New-York looked at him one-sidedly and with prejudice—Boston had no such vulgar trick or unmanly manners. It was willing to take Mr. FECHTER, a stranger, for what he was worth—more or less, fairly, squarely, composedly, sensibly. It has its favorites; it has its beliefs; it has even its 'notions'; but these are all honest and open. It welcomes cordially all talent, all genius, all worth from whatever clime or whatever its calibre. Accordingly it gave to Mr. FECHTER a generous, hearty, home-like reception. It awarded to him, as he merits, a high position as a histrionic. It saw, felt, judged him. The verdict is emphatically in his favor. It saw in him the careful, painstaking, conscientious, original, intelligent actor. It saw a man who loves the drama for the drama's good. It was conceded before 'Hamlet' was over that a master spirit was interpreting the mighty genius of SHAKESPEARE in one of his mightiest efforts." The Journal records that a "greater popular success than Mr. FECHTER achieved with his audience could not well be desired. He was applauded with great frequency and with a generosity quite unusual for Boston, and upon his recalls, which followed the first, second, third and last acts, the enthusiasm of the audience manifested itself in shouts as well as in the more common demonstrations of appreciation and approval." And the Advertiser, after alluding to the most impressive portions of the performance, remarks: "In many parts of his impersonation, however, Mr. FECHTER failed both of impetus and adequately to reproduce the meaning of the dramatist. In the lighter and more humorous passages, in particular, he was unsatisfactory, and was unworthy of comparison with Mr. BOOTH; and very often in his rapid delivery he slurred over some of the most pointed and delicate utterances of the play. In the fifth act, especially, his swift and confused utterance told against him, and the weak points of his conception appeared most conspicuous. His foreign accent did not prove an unpleasant as was anticipated, but yet it often served to confuse the meaning of a passage as well as to displease the ear. But with all these faults we are fully impressed with the idea that Mr. FECHTER's Hamlet is a very grand and noble impersonation; and we look forward with the greatest eagerness to his performance in "Ruy Blas," and in other plays where his unexpected fire and remarkable pathetic power may have their full sway." Miss LE CLERCQ was Ophelia. As in this City, Mrs. MELINDA JONES embodied the Queen, and Mr. F. C. BANGS portrayed (capitally, according to the Journal) Laertes.

MERRITT PERFORMANCE.

A dramatic benefit performance, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Hahnemann Hospital, is to be given at the Union League Theatre on the 1st of March. By permission of Mr. BOOTH, his company has kindly volunteered their services. The piece selected is Sheridan's comedy of "The Rivals," in which Miss FLORENCE will play Lydia Languish, and Mr. JOHN E. DOW will play Sir Lucius O'Trigger. The remaining male characters, the associates of these gentlemen constituting the largest portion of the chorus. Mr. CANDIDUS whose voice is a light tenor of sympathetic quality, sang with good taste, and made no very earnest endeavor to act. FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.—WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Feb. 21.

Mr. VENABLE presented the memorial of the National Board of Trade for the passage of a Marine Apprentice law. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE GEORGIA SENATORIAL CASES.

Mr. STEWART presented the credentials of Messrs. FARROW and WHITELEY, as Senators elect from the State of Georgia, which were read, and asked their reference to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. DRAKE said the papers were simply commissions from the Governor of Georgia to these men to act as Senators. The manner of the election of Senators, and the manner of authenticating the fact to the Senate, was prescribed by the Constitution, and nothing in that instrument, or in any act of Congress, authorized any Governor of any State to commission any man a Senator of the United States. It did not appear from the papers when the parties were elected, nor was their election certified to by the President of the State Senate, as required by the law. He thought the papers ought not to be referred.

Mr. POMEROY said the Constitution required each House to judge of the qualifications and election of its members; therefore he favored the reference to the Committee, so that the facts might be investigated.

Mr. STEWART remarked that if the credentials were forged still the fact would be shown upon investigation, when the Senate could act.

Mr. DRAKE said his objection was based upon the fact that they were not credentials in the sense of the Constitution and the laws, but were commissions from a party not authorized to issue them.

Mr. TRUMBULL said that in the case of the impeachment of a Senator from Tennessee, years ago, a demurrer to the jurisdiction of the Senate was sustained by the body on the ground that a Senator was not an officer of the United States, but of the States.

Mr. STEWART asked and obtained leave to withdraw the papers for the present, in order to permit the Senator from New-York (Mr. CONKLING) to address the Senate.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported a joint resolution authorizing the Northern Pacific Railroad to issue mortgage bonds, with an amendment providing the Company may make good deficiencies in its land grants arising from the previous disposition of lands along the line, by making in equal quantity with an additional limit of land.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported without amendment a bill providing for the disposition of various unused military reservations; also, the House joint resolution for the sale of certain land at Springfield, Mass.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. SCHURZ, from the Joint Committee on Retrenchment, reported without amendment the bill introduced by himself last December to reform the civil service of the United States.

It provides for the appointment by the President, with the consent of the Senate, of a civil service commission, consisting of three persons, who shall prescribe the qualifications for admission to the service, the branch and grade of the civil service, and examine candidates for such service. Persons employed in the Department of State, Treasury, Interior, Judiciary, Attorney-General's office, Post Office, Navy, Agriculture, War, Cabinet, Ministers to foreign countries and the chief clerks of the several Departments, Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, Comptrollers, Auditors, Commissioners of Internal Revenue, Assessors and Collectors of Internal Revenue, Collectors of Customs, Marshals, Attorneys, Judges and Secretaries of Territories, and all other officers appointed by the President, are not included in the provisions of the act. Appointments to the civil service must be made from persons who have been found duly qualified under the regulations established by this commission, and no person shall be appointed to any place in the order of his marks, unless it has been established by the Board that he is qualified to fill the place. The Board may call to its assistance such officers of the Government and men of learning as it deems proper, and may employ a clerk in the civil service may be required by the Board to attend to the business of the Board, and if not found competent shall be reduced to his previous place. Other clerks may be appointed by the Board for the term of five years from the date of their commission, but may be rejected on the recommendation of the Board after the expiration of eight years; the members of the Board all to be appointed for twelve years, but of the first three appointed one shall go out every four years. Their salaries are fixed at $6,000 per annum. They are to be equally eligible with each other for examination and appointment for all offices that they shall fill equally well.

THE FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, recommended the indefinite postponement of the consideration of the resolutions of the New-York Legislature rescinding the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment. He spoke as follows:

Mr. PRESIDENT—The fate of the Fifteenth Amendment does not depend upon the action or resolutions of New-York. Its formalities of its existence cannot now be added to or taken from by a column of approving States the greatest State of all. The required States appear without turning towards New-York, and it futurity has a challenge for the proceedings of to-day, that challenge will not stand for all because of the part New-York has taken in this constitutional scene. New-York ratified the amendment. Her Legislature has assumed to unseat her ratification, and though the amendment would not be affected by a retraction, were retraction possible, still a question has been asked which deserves an answer. If the ratification is retraced in which New-York has concern of her own, she can do it in common with all the States. It concerns New-York to know whether a transient partisan majority may snatch from her archives the completed record of her will touching a national ordinance of human rights. To see the question clearly, and to see it all, is to see the answer also. The ratification of a constitutional amendment is not the exercise of legislative power derived from the people of a State. It is a specific function derived entirely from the Constitution of the United States. This is its origin. What is its nature and extent? It is the option to do or not to do a given thing. It is the right to give consent; no more. Nothing less can come the other and different power to retract and cancel? We are told it may be deduced from the ethical principles and canons which maintain the right of parties, as well States as individuals, to retract from imperfect agreements, or revocable acts of a nature, still in a treaty. The argument is this: An amendment proposed by Congress becomes part of the Constitution only when approved by three-quarters of the States; its validity can result only from the agreement of a certain number of parties, and until this agreement has occurred, the amendment is but an unaccepted proposition, inoperative and inchoate. The argument embodies two errors: First, powers different in origin and nature are confounded; second, acts and subjects of action, unlike each other are treated as identical. Nations and men bargain and conduct ordinary transactions under the natural right, or of powers aided or interpreted by natural right. Here we encounter a broad distinction. Natural right, nourished by intendments and fed by many springs, is absolute and general in its attributes; it extends to all contingencies whatsoever in which it has not been abridged by society, or relinquished by the party himself. Hence, a nation or an individual having a right to enter into an engagement with such terms and conditions as discretion may suggest, has a right also to halt and turn back in season, and it is always in season to halt until the other party has gained the right to object. But, in the case before us, the power from the beginning is wholly different. It is an artificial and limited power. It is a special function, delegated in few and restricted words. It is a concurrent permission, an elective opportunity, conferred by an enabling clause of the Constitution. It can draw to its aid nothing from other sources, and nothing of intendment even from its nature. Nothing, therefore, was to alter the Constitution at all, is a derogation of the Constitution and of the common right which the Constitution confirms. Presumptions and intendments are not with so elastic provisions, but against them. Rules of interpretation established by reason and authority restrict rather than simplify continuous like this. If, therefore, at one time more than at another, or if at any time the right exists to make, or revoke, or rescind the ratification of a constitutional amendment, it must be found in the Constitution itself, either expressly laid down, or resulting necessarily from words which are laid down. If follows that instead of a case in which the right to retract depends upon the diligence of its exercise, we have a case in which there was no right to retract at any time; in which, if one party or one case party must retract before the other requires it, or he object, we have a case in which the right to retract was wanting from the beginning.

Having referred to the absence of analogy, either in scope or quality, between the general and inherent rights of parties to determine their engagements, and the special and delegated elective right to ratify amendments of the Constitution, I ask what analogy is not also wanting between the acts to be done, even when separated from the powers applicable to them? The attention of the Constitution of the United States is not in a legal acceptation, a matter of contract between the parties to be bound. No State can originate an amendment or prevent its submission. All the States together cannot waive the ratification of three-fourths, after three-fourths have ratified. All the States together cannot at any stage aid or permit a single repenting State to revoke its ratification; and very similar observations apply to the consent of a State to the submission of an amendment. The Constitution, in its provisions, is not a bargain between parties, it is not even a scheme of government, adopted by the States. It is a solemn ordination of American people. That the United States individually or in severalty, be not unwise to the Constitution, the decisions of the Court, affirmed by all departments of the Government, and established in war and in peace. The fact of the recent which rebellion rose to assert, that the Constitution, not by the hands of the head of a State, which, claiming to have seceded, had attempted to make the Constitution of Mississippi, but by the hands of the people, represented in Congress, and in the Legislatures of Mississippi, and of the other States, ratified the amendment. It is not in the power of any State to retract, or to revoke, or to rescind the ratification of the people of the State, which, in the exercise of the sovereignty, which, in the exercise of the sovereignty, which, in the exercise of the sovereignty

Oil and Salt Wells of the Dominion: Their Condition and Future—Some Interesting Facts.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TORONTO, Wednesday, Feb. 16, 1870.

Great as were the supposed natural resources of Canada, it was not without amazing the greatest surprise that the discovery of coal oil in the western section of Ontario was announced. It has been known for a long time that the Indians claimed to have found something resembling oil in the County of Lambton, but no faith was placed in the statement until sufficient proof the belief on the public mind that there was foundation for standing. In an high tips knowledge of the county affected so and an extent was revealed the fact mentioned. The discovery seen had the effect of stimulating enterprise in the oil district, and speculation prevailed to such an extent that oil indeed spring up like mushrooms, while promoters of projects of a speculative type flocked in from all quarters. The chief points of attraction were Petrolia, Oil Springs, and Bothwell, and there the busy hum of human industry was heard on every side; oil lands were sold at fabulous prices, companies were organized to operate wells, and nothing appeared to be of the slightest consequence to the uninitiated except the development of the oil regions. The idea was abroad that wealth fairly poured into the lap of all who had anything to do with the oil business, and the people very decided into the belief that to simply touch it was an to make rich. Hundreds, nay thousands, made money, it is true; they speculated in lands, or they took stock in companies which paid nothing at first. Wealth was really amassed by many in a marvelously short time; but good fortune did not smile very long, for the crash came, and a terrible one it was to those who had given largely into speculation. The excitement caused by the oil discovery was not confined to the district where it was made, for boring was tried in every section of the country, and the whole Province was alive with prospecting. Hardly a rock or corner being passed by the enthusiastic oil searchers, who seemed to imagine that they had only to bore anywhere and oil would gush out as well.

It was no easy matter to check the tide of wild and reckless speculation that had set in, and which threatened to engulf all in one common ruin; but the excitement had its day, and a subsidence came even sooner than the most cautious could have anticipated. Just when it was at its height the Fenian troubles began, and the descent upon the Province was made the excuse for seizing upon the opportunity to abandon the operations which had been entered on so extensively at different points. Gradually the army of speculators disappeared, the wells were stopped, and in a short time complete stagnation prevailed throughout the district. The villages became desolate, and the houses tenantless; the oil business was now a byword and a reproach, for it was held that the hopes of trickery and deception had led to the disaster. In this position matters remained until within a year or so past, when some of those who ventured their all began to see that a chance was afforded them of doing something to restore the lost reputation of the oil country, at the same time that there was also a prospect of turning the deserted wells to a good account; and in this view they were not altogether mistaken. Steps were accordingly taken to recommence operations, Petrolia being selected as the place most likely to be the best. Although the most productive part of the oil regions from the first, Petrolia was in a measure abandoned through a feeling of jealousy on the part of some who had a larger interest in the two rival villages of Oil Springs and Bothwell, both of which grew rapidly, and gave promise of becoming large-sized towns if the oil business had continued to be successful.

The failure of the speculation, however, rendered them of very little account, and like Petrolia, they were almost deserted. The last mentioned place, on the revival of the enterprise, became one of the most important points in the whole of the western section of the Province, and is now regarded as vastly better than it formerly was, even when the oil fever was at its greatest height. Being in the centre of the oil regions, and surrounded by upwards of three hundred wells, there can be little doubt that its prosperity is insured if the business succeeds. It is easily reached by rail, a branch of the Great Western Railway running to it from Wyoming on the London and Sarnia Branch of that line. The village is by no means either picturesque or inviting; it is in the very heart of the forest, and can only be approached from the different points by the worst of roads. A visit would be sufficient to convince any one of the great abundance of petroleum, for it abounds everywhere, and sends out an odor that becomes disagreeable long before the spot is reached. Even in the very driest Summer weather the ditches by the road sides are filled with the oily stuff, and it is not the pleasantest walking where it is oozing out of the ground at almost every step. The business of the district is now very large, and constantly increasing. Some of the wells are operated almost constantly, throwing up streams which indicate an inexhaustible supply. The crude oil has been selling at $1 40 to $1 50, in gold, per barrel, and the refined at 25 cents per gallon on the spot. The calculation is that the crude yields from sixty to eighty per cent. of pure oil. At this rate refining will bring a handsome return to those engaged in it. A large still, capable of holding two thousand gallons of crude oil at once has been in operation at Petrolia for some time, and it is now doing an immense business. Several refineries have been established in various parts of the country, and they are all doing well. One was erected a short time since at Dundas on a large scale, and started with a capital of $50,000, which will shortly be doubled, and the Ontario Carbon Oil Company have started another at Hamilton, which manufactures solely for the New-York market. Several oil men from Pennsylvania have recently come over, and are operating extensively at Petrolia. They appear to be well pleased with the prospects, and consider the advantages greater than they enjoyed in the Pennsylvania oil regions. It is reported that a combination has been formed by the New-York operators in oil to prevent the sale of Canadian oil in the United States, and the report has produced an unfavorable effect; but very few regard the statement as anything more than arise on the part of the dealers on this side.

Thus far the attempt to reconstruct the oil business in Canada has been more successful than was anticipated, and there are parties sanguine enough to believe that it will ultimately prove as extensive and as profitable as formerly; but there is reason to fear the hope will not be realized, inasmuch as the business can never be as profitable again as it was. Various means have been tried, but in vain, to keep up the price of oil. A prominent gentleman of Chicago had an entire monopoly of the oil for a year, having entered into arrangements with the manufacturers, paying them a certain sum each for closing their refineries. The object, that of getting up the price, failed, and the monopolist was poorer for the operation by a great deal. From the failure of the attempted monopoly dates the first effort to renew the business which now gives such promise of becoming a real and substantial success in the estimation of very many.

Some five or six years ago the discovery of salt was made in the vicinity of Goderich, a thriving town located on the bank of the Maitland River, and at the terminus of the Buffalo and Lake Huron Railroad. The discovery was made by a company who were boring for oil. Failing to strike oil, to their no small surprise they came upon a salt bed, and were well enough pleased at finding what they considered a more valuable product, for they immediately set to work to establish salt works. The well being put in operation at a depth of somewhere about a thousand feet, a steady stream of brine was pumped, which yielded ninety per cent. of pure salt, and that is the yield of nearly all the wells, which is considered the largest ever known. The productivity of the Saginaw salt district, it was thought at one time, would be a bar to the successful working of salt wells at Goderich, but time has shown that this was a mistake, the first well paid handsome dividends to its shareholders, some thirteen per cent., and very soon the spring of enterprise began to show itself, and a mania not only was prevalent. Wells were multiplied with great rapidity, until it was found that the district for miles was saturated with salt, the best extending to Clinton, a distance of twelve miles from Goderich, and there also the manufacture is now being successfully carried on. The increase of wells, however, led to a depression in the business, and this was attributed to everything but the right cause. The supply was so much greater than the demand, that the manufacturers uttered loud complaints, and finally called upon the Government and the Legislature to assist them, by way of protecting the native salt against the foreign article. Instead of the foreign salt coming in competition, the most was to be feared from another quarter, for the salt makers of the State of New-York came in the way. It had been represented that they had State protection in the shape of a bounty paid to them for every barrel manufactured. At all events the salt was sent over by Canada and sold lower here than in Buffalo, and at a price with which our salt makers declared they could not compete. Thus far the Government have been deaf to the appeals for protection, and while the promoters are still engaged in trying to induce the Government to concede their demands, it is announced that the prospects of the salt manufacturers have been wonderfully enhanced of late. As English company has been organized to work some of the wells, and the importunate of Goderich are just now in excellent humor with themselves, as might naturally be supposed when everything looks so well.

Salt had been obtained for more than a quarter of a century in the neighborhood of Hamilton, but by the slow process of taking it from the open springs, and which at best was a coarse article. There can be no question that the Goderich salt will prove an invaluable boon to the country. One well is capable of producing fifty barrels per day; but this is not the average of all the wells, some of them producing much less than that quantity. The quality of the article has probably never been equaled, but it may be questioned if it is the most suitable for packing purposes, the great bulk of the salt being used for that way. The imposition of a duty on salt by our Government would not do the Canadian manufacturer much good, except, perhaps, to drive out the foreign article, which our salt makers fread so much just now, because he is not in a position to take advantage of the United States market even were it thrown open to him. Does it not appear strange that the United States salt maker should continue to undersell the Canadian manufacturer in his own market? Of course we are told that the cause of the inability of the latter to compete with his foreign rival is that the business has not been sufficiently developed to give him the advantage of selling at as low prices as the imported article is offered at. As the facilities increased we will doubtless be better able to meet competition, and it is an encouraging fact that the Goderich salt business has greatly improved during the past few months. As a proof of the interest taken in the development of the salt district, it may be mentioned that nearly every member of the Provincial Legislature has signed a Petition to the Dominion Parliament asking for the imposition of a duty on foreign salt. It is questionable, nevertheless, if the Government will be induced to give the protection that will be asked for in the present Session of Parliament.

The Brooklyn Gas-lamps Council.

The battle of the gas lamps continues to rage in the Common Council. The letter of Street Commissioner PURDY, in reply to certain allegations made by Alderman WHITING, of the Twentieth Ward, was read, in spite of the protests of the latter, at the meeting on Monday evening. After a lengthy rejoinder by Alderman WHITING it was moved by Alderman CLANCY, and unanimously adopted, "that the Street Commissioner's communication be printed in the minutes, and referred to the Assessment Committee for investigation, and that the Aldermen of the Twentieth Ward appear before that Commissioner and submit to them the facts in his possession in regard to the matter."

At the same meeting a letter was read from the Mayor, vetoing an appropriation of $100 for the expenses of a special committee to go to Albany; also, a case of $50 for assistance to the Inspection of Buildings Bureau. With reference to the latter department, a resolution, by Alderman THORNE, "to have the act creating the office of Superintendent of Building repealed, and the duties of said office vested in the Fire Commissioner of Brooklyn," was tabled.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Although Tuesday is generally the busiest day of the week at the Exchange Salesroom, yesterday the brokers kept holiday, and no sales at all took place. To-day will be the active day of the week. REYNOLDS CONVICTED.

Is Guilty of Murder in the First Degree.

Proceedings of the Second Day of the Trial—The Evidence, Arguments, Charge and Verdict—The Death Sentence to be Pronounced Sunday.

When the Court of Oyer and Terminer convened yesterday morning to proceed with the trial of JOHN REYNOLDS, there was an agreeable prospect, which the event amply justified, that the day would not be marred by the scenes of mob-disorder in the Court room which had marked the previous day. The crowd then had seen as dense without the bar that no one person would move without disturbing the entire mass, and Judge INGRAHAM, determined that the dignity and decorum of his tribunal should not be again outraged, gave orders that on yesterday no more should be admitted than could be comfortably seated, and the arrangements of the officers of the Court for carrying this order into effect were so admirable that it was literally executed. As a consequence, the session was noticeable for the excellent order and quiet that prevailed. The prisoner was equally contented in the decorum thence as in the comparative retreat of the pen wherein he is. He sat, as before, near his counsel, and beside him one of those singular specimens of humanity known in this county as Deputy Sheriffs. The widow and orphans of the murdered man were again in attendance, but as they sat in the rear of the room behind the prisoner, and were not called into the foreground by the proceedings, there was no dramatic grouping of the assassin and his living victims. Thus calm, uninoculated, seeking no extraneous aid, the law sought to determine the question joined between itself and JOHN REYNOLDS.

The first witness called by Mr. HOWE was Dr. WILLIAM G. WALLACE, who testified on Tuesday, that he answered affirmatively the question whether cerebral irritation might exist for a long course of years and not be detected.

Cross-examined by District-Attorney GARVIN, the witness stated that he had seen the prisoner at every day since he was brought to the Tombs two days after the murder, and that he had make careful examination of him on at least five different occasions, each lasting about half an hour. Witness was about to state the result of his investigations when Mr. HOWE objected, but the objection being overruled, the witness gave it as his decided opinion that REYNOLDS is a entirely sane; he is sound him rational, coherent, without delusion; REYNOLDS has no education, but nothing was apparent in his language or action that would create a suspicion that he is insane. Witness stated positively that he had been unable to discover that Reynolds labored under any delusion whatever, and then said, in answer to a question of District-Attorney GARVIN, that the vast majority of the cases of insanity are marked by the presence of delusion; he had personal knowledge of about one thousand cases of insanity, and delusion of some kind marked every one of them.

REUBEN A. VANCE, M. D., was next called by the defence and answered as the previous witness the usual question as to cerebral irritation. The witness was then cross-examined by Judge GARVIN, when it immediately appeared that he, too, had made examinations of the prisoner, and that all the evidence of insanity was that of a man of weak and uncultivated intellect. The usual splitting of fine hairs then followed by which the defence sought to show that insanity may exist without being detected by science, which being admitted, learned, inventive counsel turned about to show that a man having epilepsy with loss of consciousness may be subject to impulsive insanity, but Dr. VANCE, wondering, answered the question by asking how in the world a man could have impulses when he had no consciousness. The witness then went on to describe the application of the microscope to the examination of the working of the brain by which it is claimed any abnormal condition can be detected.

After the conclusion of the examination of this witness, the dramatic climax of the case was reached by the counsel for the defence placing the accused prisoner upon the stand to testify in his own behalf. But REYNOLDS mounted the platform, took the oath as any other witness might have done, and sat down composedly facing jury and audience. Mr. HOWE refused to ask him any questions, and accorded that privilege to Judge GARVIN. That gentleman declined, but, himself, very deliberately directed the jury to interrogate the prisoner, and after a pause of a few seconds Mr. CHARLES JONES, of the jury, accommodated the counsel, when the following colloquy ensued between him and the prisoner:

QUESTION—Into which place did you go first? ANSWER—I don't know.

Q.—What took you into the grocery store? A.—I don't know anything about it. I don't know that I was in there at all.

Q.—At what time did you go in? A.—I don't know.

Q.—Where did you sleep the night before? A.—I don't know where.

Q.—Where did you sleep the night before that? A.—Outside—in the street.

Q.—On the morning of the murder had you any breakfast? A.—I am not exactly sure. I know I had something to eat.

Q.—When you entered the grocery store where did you go first? A.—I don't know that I was ever in there.

Q.—You remember going into the shoemaker's? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—You don't remember going in there? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Don't you remember asking the shoemaker for a knife? A.—I don't remember; only what I told him here, (pointing to Captain FOSTER.)

Q.—Did you take a knife from the shoemaker's? A.—That I don't know.

At this point Mr. JONES declared, and REYNOLDS went down to his seat without his nonchalance having been disturbed for a moment. His answers as to the place where he had slept on the night of the crime, seemed to create the belief that the method of his madness would have been more marvelous if his memory had been as conveniently defective on those points as on all others.

Mr. HOWE then addressed the jury in behalf of the prisoner in a speech an hour and a half in length, in which he pressed generally for the sanity of the prisoner, and at one point sought to enforce his discourse by dragging REYNOLDS up beside him, but the latter had sense enough to shrink from being shown like a beast, and instantly sat down again and let his counsel to go on unmolested. He then ran rapidly from the works he had established as authorities on the subject of insanity, but did not claim that his client was suffering from any particular form of mental aberration, but seemed to consider him a sort of general lunatic, combining all forms. He admitted that the crime with which he was charged was most atrocious, but he laid down his doctrine that the greater the atrocity of a crime the greater the likelihood that the criminal was insane. Reviewing the testimony, he sought to make the jury believe that the expression "I am your brother," used by the prisoner to the deceased, his stealing the knife, his clinching the knife after the killing, his recistance on the way to the Station House, his declaration at the desk that he was a thief, the discrepancies in his statements as to his birthplace, were all incontestible proofs of disordered intellect and irresponsible action.

District-Attorney GARVIN responded in a speech of great power, occupying only forty minutes in the delivery. He dwelt upon the alarming frequency of great crimes, not only in this City, but all over the Union, and insisted on the duty of juries to vindicate the law and save the community from the outlaws who threaten to subvert society. In dealing with the case, he claimed there could be no doubt of the crime committed by the prisoner. It was murder in the first degree, and the defence of insanity, he considered, had not been made out. He had not shown a shadow from the previous history of the prisoner that he had ever been subject to insanity, and every particle of medical evidence introduced had gone to prove the prisoner a man entirely sane and responsible for his acts. The defence, therefore, had been driven to take refuge in the theories of speculative writers dealing with cases of insanity, but none which corresponded with the facts of this case. As to the want of rational motive upon which counsel for the defence had insisted, Judge GARVIN insisted that it was present in the desire of the outcast to obtain lodging for the night, and his determination not to be ousted from the shelter into which he had intruded. But motive can be engendered in an instant, and many cases were cited to show how it had been found under circumstances entirely analogous to those of the Townsend murder. It was then insisted that all the facts upon which Mr. HOWE had dwelt as showing insanity were on the contrary conclusive proofs of sanity. There was nothing singular in the expression, "I am your brother," under the circumstances under which it was made, and the determined retention of the knife was most irrefutable evidence of sanity. The prisoner intended to escape, and attempted it; he would indeed have been insane had he left the knife behind him by which his identity could be established. As to the remark in the Station House, that he was a thief, there was nothing unusual in it, as these hardened ruffians frequently and unscrupulously proclaim their true character. In replying to a reflection made by Mr. HOWE upon the fact that many murderers remain in the Tombs untried, while a sane man is rushed into trial within twenty days after the crime, Judge GARVIN said that in all these cases the prosecution had used every effort to bring them all to a speedy conclusion, but had been defeated by the delays of the law. The case of KEAY had been taken to the Court of Appeals, and in other instances commissions had been issued to take testimony in behalf of the prisoners in foreign countries. The prosecuting officer would not avoid these delays, and had their opponents anything to do with the case in hand, which it was the duty of the jury to consider, entirely upon its own merits. The District-Attorney concluded by an earnest appeal to the jury to save this City from the horrors impending from the idea prevalent among the criminal classes that the law is paralyzed.

Judge INGRAHAM then charged the jury, beginning by a reference to the solemnity of the duty imposed upon them; it was their duty to consider the case solely in the light of the law and the evidence, without allowing any passion, prejudice, popular clamor or other extraneous influence of any kind whatever to have any influence upon their minds, nor should any doubt as to the propriety of capital punishment deter them from finding the verdict as they should find it upon the facts. Juries do not inflict the penalties for crimes nor judges as they are imposed by the law itself. Judge INGRAHAM then said that the facts were exclusively for the jury to consider, except so far as it was his duty to inform them of the law which is applicable to them. In considering the question as to facts, and it was his duty to say that all reasonable doubts must be resolved in favor of the prisoner. He informed them of the several grades of homicide and the facts necessary to constitute the crime. The charge against the prisoner was murder in the first degree, which is the killing of another without justifiable or excusable cause. The determination to kill, which is an essential ingredient of the offence, can be made at the very moment of striking the blow. In this case there was no doubt as to the killing, the weapon or the person—all these facts being conceded. The defence of insanity had been set up in behalf of the prisoner, and it was the duty of the Court to say that the law not only believes the insane man from all responsibility for his acts, but will not even permit him to be tried for them. But the medical definitions of insanity are not those of the law. The legal doctrine is that any one who knows the nature of the act he is doing and its consequences, that it is unlawful and morally wrong—is responsible. This is the well-established rule in both England and America, but Judge INGRAHAM was disposed to go further in the present case, and say that the person accused of crime should have reason enough to apply that knowledge to the act he was committing. Sanity in law is always presumed by the law, and no evidence had been introduced to show that the prisoner had ever been insane or subject to disease that induce insanity. The prisoner had showed method and cunning in his conduct just anterior, at and subsequent to the homicide, and all the physicians concur in the opinion that he was sane at the time they examined him. Judge INGRAHAM remarked, in conclusion, that cases are seldom found where a man is insane at one moment and sane at all others before and after; he never knew of such a state of fact being proven but an acquittal had once followed from it. The lesser degrees of homicide were then stated, and the jury informed that if they believed the prisoner sane they could find him guilty of any one of them, and at 2:20 o'clock P. M. the case was given to the jury, who retired.

After an absence of fifty-nine minutes they returned, but it was soon found that it was merely to ask a question. Mr. NORMAN J. REEVES, the sixth juror, desired to know if they were at liberty to find a verdict of guilty of any one of the lesser degrees of homicide, to which Judge INGRAHAM answered that he had already charged "to that effect, the grade of murder in the second degree happening to be specially mentioned as one which the jury might find. Mr. REEVES hastily inquired, "What's the punishment?" Judge INGRAHAM so abruptly answered, "That it was not a matter within the province of the jury, nor a matter about which they should be concerned, but I have no objection to telling you that it is imprisonment at hard labor for life." The inquisitive juror was silenced, and with his comrades retired. Again there was the tearsome waiting for the verdict, made intensely painful, however, by the fact that it was known that the first vote stood ten for conviction and two undecided. After a lapse of more than half an hour the jury were again heard tapping at the door, and being admitted the second of the doubters was quickly developed, Mr. CHARLES JONES, the twelfth juror, being the person needing light. He rose and asked if there had been any evidence that REYNOLDS was insane at the time he committed the crime, to which Judge INGRAHAM answered decidedly that there was no evidence whatever to show that he was ever other than sane, when Mr. JONES anxiously asked, "But is it not possible he was insane?" To which Judge INGRAHAM answered that the question was one exclusively for the jury, and smiling portrayed to the astonishment of the inquirer, Mr. JONES hastened to declare that he was considerations in the matter, and that he was no attempting to take advantage of the evident desperation of the jury, the Court cut him short with the remark that the time for argument was past, and the jury for the third time retired to consider of their verdict.

At 4:30 P. M. another question was sent in to the Judge, but as it was answered in writing with the concurrence of the counsel for the accused, its nature was not divulged. Five minutes later, at 4:35 o'clock P. M., and two hours and forty-three minutes after they had first taken the case, the jury again entered the Court room, to the surprised gaze that they had returned for further instructions, and the sensation therefore caused no stir or excitement. But they had agreed upon a verdict, and to the question of Mr. VANSCOONOVER, the Clerk of the Court, "How say you gentlemen of the jury, do you find the prisoner at the bar guilty or not guilty of the murder of WILLIAM TOWNSEND?" the foreman answered "Guilty." Still there was suspense, and the audience hung with bated breath upon lips that were to utter the other words of deep import, "of murder in the first degree, in manner and form as charged in the indictment?" Then the jury was polled, each juror, as his name was called, answered affirmatively the question; "Is the verdict you announced your verdict?" Mr. FELLOWS, the Assistant District-Attorney, then arose and moved that the Court proceed at once to impose upon the prisoner the sentence of the law that follows the verdict just rendered. The audience awoke to the possibility of a sensation in the pronouncing of the death penalty, but were disappointed. Mr. HOWE arose, and saying that he had then discharged his duty so his unfortunate client to the best of his ability so far as that tribunal was concerned, asked that judgment be suspended until he could resolve in his own mind that further step. It would be premature possible for him to take. As he only asked for a few hours, the Court granted his request, and ordered the condemned man to be remanded until this morning at 10:30 o'clock.

The outer door was then fastened to detain the audience, and REYNOLDS, having been searched, manacled, was taken from the Court room by a posse of Deputy Sheriffs. To the last moment he betrayed no agitation whatever. He looked unflinchingly upon the jury as they gave the verdict that condemned him to an ignominious death, even without the twitching of an eyelid. He took no interest in the placing of the gyves upon his wrists, and did not indicate that he understood their deep significance. When this operation was at last completed—and the Sheriffs were clumsy and precisely—he rose at their bidding and firmly, almost defiantly, walked from the Court where he had been tried and convicted. When it was certain that he was so far on his way to the Tombs that he was beyond reach of the curious crowd, the doors were opened and the multitude poured out. Some rushed wildly down the stairs without the usual formality of asking to obtain a glimpse of the felon the law had rescued for a halter, but they were disappointed. Before any of them could reach him to annoy or provoke, JOHN REYNOLDS had disappeared behind the sheltering walls of the Tombs.

Railroad Accident near New-Rochelle.

A serious railroad accident occurred near the station at New-Rochelle, on Monday afternoon, which is likely to result in the loss of two lives. Mr. and Mrs. O'ROURKE, who live in the building known as Chatsworth Station, situated about two miles east of New-Rochelle, while under the influence of liquor, proceeded to walk along the railroad on the way home from the village. Mrs. O'ROURKE was on the west side or down track, when the Norwalk special train came in sight on the same track, city bound, but she failed to notice it or pay any attention to its approach. Mr. O'ROURKE observing her danger sprang forward to rescue her, but his movements were so unsteady that he failed in his efforts to save her, while he endangered his life. He fell so far clear of the down track between them and struck both. One was knocked to the right and the other to the left. Mr. O'ROURKE received a compound fracture of the jaws, and one of the jaw joints was dislocated, so that no hopes are entertained of his recovery. Mrs. O'ROURKE had her left or near leg broken, and Dr. MOULTON and Patrolman Pamoy, who attended them, believes that she is also badly injured internally, and that her chances of recovery are by no means encouraging. After their wounds were temporarily dressed they were conveyed home on board the same train as it returned from the city. It was understood yesterday afternoon that they were both still alive.

Co-operative Building Association of the United Cabinet Makers.

The Cooperative Building Association of the United Cabinet Makers, of this City, is an association formed for the purpose of providing its members with building lots, and enabling them to get houses of their own. It has taken out a charter and bought sixty-five acres of land in Astoria, L. I., which have been laid out in streets containing building lots, 25x100 feet each. The members of the Association to the number of about 400, are paying for their lots at $200 each by weekly installments of $2 for each lot from the day of the organization of the Association (Dec. 7, 1869.) The shares of the Association thus organized have been taken, a second section of 18 has formed, taking out plot charters and electing the same officers as Section I, viz.: JACOB SCHMITT, President; ANDREW ALBERSHOT, Vice-President; GERHARD SCHNEIDER, Treasurer; F. BRUNS, Secretary. Section II of the Association has also bought a tract of land adjoining section I, and has it laid out in streets containing 1,000 building lots, 25x100 feet each. The members of this section, to the number of about 800, are paying for their lots, at $200 each, also in weekly installments of $2 for each lot from the day of the organization of the section, Aug. 2, 1869. About 100 lots of this section have not yet been taken. The lots of section I were distributed among the members by lot yesterday, each member that had several shares getting adjoining lots. The drawing was done at Columbian Hall, Nos. 263 and 265 Grand-street, under the supervision of the officers of the Association and a Committee of five, and took nearly all day, the hall being crowded with the members of the Association. The building of houses on the lots distributed will commence in the Spring, and it is expected that a considerable number of houses will be erected this year. The distribution of the building lots of section II will come off on December 24, next, also by drawing lots. The Association, although scarcely two years old, is composed of working men, nearly all the members being Germans.

COUNT VON BELLOW.

Interesting Additional Revelations Concerning His Case—The Duped Wife Proves Natural Fools.

Since the arrest of "Count OTTO VON BELLOW at New-Providence, on Monday, and the brief exposé of his financial and amorous escapades published in the papers, additional revelations have been vouchsafed by many of the duped parties, including members of the young lady's family and the pastor of the church of which she is a member, which, if credited on the trial, will prove him to be an adroit and accomplished adventurer. The young lady's name is MARY E. COMBEY, and at the time of the "Count's" advent to Elizabeth, last Summer, she resided with her widowed mother on a very "handsome property" in Elizabeth. He had been but a short time in this country prior to his arrival in Elizabeth, although he spoke the English language fluently, he claiming to be a person of pleasing address and winning manners. After domiciling himself in that city, he became a member of the Broad-street Baptist Church, of which Rev. Dr. MILLER is pastor. Miss MARY E. COMBEY was also a member of the same Church and a cordial to stranger in the church, in receipt of a yearly stipend. Her mother at this time was worth about $40,000, and after a time spent in wooing the fair Miss COMBEY, an engagement being effected, the complacent "Count" took up his residence with her family, and the marriage shortly afterwards ensued. The brother was indirectly dissatisfied with the match, as likewise her pastor, Dr. MILLER, but the daughter's eagerness to become a Countess was implacable, and the matrimonial bond was duly sealed. Soon after he induced Mrs. COMBEY to sell her property at Elizabeth, purchase a handsome mansion and build a villa at Westfield. Here, as alleged, he represented himself a doctor of good standing in Brooklyn, and, to give plausibility to his profession, several of his acquaintance had their ailments entrusted to his medical advice. Besides being a disciple of Esculapius, he introduced himself as an agent of the firm of STAULBERG & HALLECK, Wallstreet brokers, and thus succeeded in obtaining money from the following for speculative purposes: WILLIAM BURNHAM, $2,500; OSCAR MARSH, $250; CHARLES COMBEY, (brother to the young lady,) $6,000; Mrs. COMBEY, (mother to the young lady,) $6,000; besides several smaller sums from various others. CHARLES MARSH, a friend of the COMBEY family, also loaned him $1,800 to defray the expenses of his nuptials. When his creditors found no returns forthcoming for their investments they commenced to doubt the unsullied integrity of the gentlemanly OTTO, and on watching his movements, discovered, as alleged, that his operations were confined to the New-York gambling houses, and not Wall-street. Indignant at being thus victimized, they sought redress by procuring his arrest and indictment on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. Despite all these accusations and the malediction of his victims, the young wife is answering in her affection, and still affirms that his character is none reproach, and their mutual love unabated. Yesterday morning she visited him in his cell, where she remained with him for an hour, and at his departure told Mrs. WARD, the Jail Warden's wife, that she was prepared to share his fate, even if the poorhouse were the stern alternative. According to the statement of a prominent clergyman in Elizabeth, the Count presented a letter of introduction to Rev. Dr. MILLER, from a Bishop of the Episcopal church in Europe. The letter was nicely sealed, and, as the "Count" thought, contained a favorable recommendation, but it seems that while it came from a distinguished minister it was written by him from his knowledge of the Count while residing in a private in Europe. The Bishop, it is stated, is ignorant of the fact that his letter was used for such purposes, but until a few days ago was not aware that the "Count" and the alleged European culprit were identical. Dr. MILLER states that at the time of his marriage he actually stated that his mother was a cousin of Count BISMARCK, and that his father, who died after of Elizabeth, was another creditor to the amount of $700, and that at the time of his arrest he was negotiating a loan with a Wall-street broker named R. V. DUMOUCH. He will be arraigned before the Court of Special Sessions on Monday, when all the witnesses are expected to be present.

Reception of the Thirteenth Regiment.

The full-dress reception and promenade of the Thirteenth Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., was held on Monday evening in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Members of the regular army, the militia and the navy were present to do honor to the occasion, in addition to the members of the gallant corps, with a brilliant assemblage of the beauty and the fashion of the City of Churches. The following guests, among others, were present: Governor HOFFMAN and suite, Generals BURNSIDE and McDOWELL, with their respective staffs, General SHERIDAN and staff, General DAKIN and staff, General MANSON and staff, Colonel DENNYSON and staff, of the Fourteenth Regiment, Colonel ROGERTSON, of the Seventy-first Regiment, and a host of others.

The interior of the Academy was transformed into a perfect bower of flowers and foliage, from the dome hung a huge festoon of bright flags and streamers gracefully intertwined, while from the centre of the hall, directly over the stage, was suspended the new regimental coat of arms. At the back of the stage was a camp scene, with the coat of arms in the foreground, with two formidable mountain howitzers. The boxes were tastefully trimmed with garlands of flowers, and within the boxes were various pieces of statuary, which were illuminated by calcium lights, which enhanced the picturesque effect. On the right and left of the stage were handsomely mounted pictures of General JORDAN and Daniel Webster, to this he added the assemblage of varied and gorgeous military uniforms, and the rich display of feminine toilettes, it need hardly be said that the tout ensemble was of the most magnificent description.

The arrangements of the Committee were of the most perfect description, and the gallant Colonel of the Thirteenth has every reason to be proud of this most successful of all previous reunions of the corps.

A Greenpoint Stabbing Affray.

On Monday evening three friends, two of whom were named BLACKERT and ALLEN, working in the same factory and living in the same neighborhood, entered the liquor store of P. FERRLON, on the corner of Eagle-street and Union-avenue, Greenpoint. They drank several times. A dispute arising between BLACKERT and ALLEN ended in a fight, in the course of which BLAKERT was stabbed in several places. BLAKERT was thought to be fatally wounded. He was taken to the station house in Eagle-street. He stated to Captain BROWNE of the Forty-seventh Precinct, yesterday, that he did not wish any mention made of the occurrence; but notwithstanding, steps were taken to arrest the supposed prominent actors. Both parties have heretofore borne excellent characters, as stated by their employers, OSBORN & Co. The wounded man was married about a year ago.

Verdict in the Case of Mary Cassidy.

The following verdict has been returned by the jury with reference to the circumstance attending the death of Mrs. CASSIDY:

"That the deceased, MARY CASSIDY, came to her death on the 19th day of February, 1870, at the Dispensary on Flatbush-avenue, in this city, while under medical treatment, from organic disease of the heart, and from no other cause."

The verdict having been received, one of the jury stated that the jury wished it understood that they fully exonerated the husband of the deceased.

Horrible Tragedy in Massachusetts—A Man Shoots his Mother and then Kills Himself.

From the Fall River (Mass.) News, Feb. 21.

The tenement house in the rear of Mr. McKEVITT'S, No. 16 Fifth-street, was the scene last night of a shocking murder and suicide. The parties concerned in this sad tragedy were WILLIAM and THOMAS BOOTH, brothers, who occupied adjacent tenements. WILLIAM, the elder brother, was about 28 years of age, and was a widower with one child, a lad about 12 years of age. He occupied the tenement in the west end of the house, on the first door, and his aged mother kept house for him. THOMAS, with his wife and two children, occupied the tenement in the east end, same floor. He was about 26 years of age.

Last night, a little before 10 o'clock, two of the Night Watch, Officers HALL and BRENNAN, found WILLIAM BOOTH on Forty-street, in a state of intoxication, and took him to his house. His mother had retired to bed, and soon after entering the house WILLIAM began a conversation with her about wood, would become of them if he should die. She spoke kindly to him, but he finally became exasperated at some remark she made, and going into her bedroom struck her several severe blows. She screamed for assistance, when her son THOMAS rushed in, and catching hold of WILLIAM compelled him to desist. His mother in the meantime got up and went into THOMAS' tenement. THOMAS followed, and closed the door. WILLIAM then took down his rifle, rammed it full of powder, fired the gun, and fell down, dead. The ball entered his mouth, and lodged in the back part of his head. The ball was found in the room, next door, by Officer HALL. The ball was found, although it was dark, and the room was crowded with people, and the floor was covered with a thick coat of sawdust. The deceased was a native of Ireland, and his mother is a native of Scotland, both being Germans.

COUNT VON BELLOW.

Interesting Additional Revelations Concerning His Case—The Duped Wife Proves Natural Fools.

Since the arrest of "Count OTTO VON BELLOW at New-Providence, on Monday, and the brief exposé of his financial and amorous escapades published in the papers, additional revelations have been vouchsafed by many of the duped parties, including members of the young lady's family and the pastor of the church of which she is a member, which, if credited on the trial, will prove him to be an adroit and accomplished adventurer. The young lady's name is MARY E. COMBEY, and at the time of the "Count's" advent to Elizabeth, last Summer, she resided with her widowed mother on a very "handsome property" in Elizabeth. He had been but a short time in this country prior to his arrival in Elizabeth, although he spoke the English language fluently, he claiming to be a person of pleasing address and winning manners. After domiciling himself in that city, he became a member of the Broad-street Baptist Church, of which Rev. Dr. MILLER is pastor. Miss MARY E. COMBEY was also a member of the same Church and a cordial to stranger in the church, in receipt of a yearly stipend. Her mother at this time was worth about $40,000, and after a time spent in wooing the fair Miss COMBEY, an engagement being effected, the complacent "Count" took up his residence with her family, and the marriage shortly afterwards ensued. The brother was indirectly dissatisfied with the match, as likewise her pastor, Dr. MILLER, but the daughter's eagerness to become a Countess was implacable, and the matrimonial bond was duly sealed. Soon after he induced Mrs. COMBEY to sell her property in Elizabeth, purchase a handsome mansion and build a villa at Westfield. Here, as alleged, he represented himself a doctor of good standing in Brooklyn, and, to give plausibility to his profession, several of his acquaintance had their ailments entrusted to his medical advice. Besides being a disciple of Esculapius, he introduced himself as an agent of the firm of STAULBERG & HALLECK, Wallstreet brokers, and thus succeeded in obtaining money from the following for speculative purposes: WILLIAM BURNHAM, $2,500; OSCAR MARSH, $250; CHARLES COMBEY, (brother to the young lady,) $6,000; Mrs. COMBEY, (mother to the young lady,) $6,000; besides several smaller sums from various others. CHARLES MARSH, a friend of the COMBEY family, also loaned him $1,800 to defray the expenses of his nuptials. When his creditors found no returns forthcoming for their investments they commenced to doubt the unsullied integrity of the gentlemanly OTTO, and on watching his movements, discovered, as alleged, that his operations were confined to the New-York gambling houses, and not Wall-street. Indignant at being thus victimized, they sought redress by procuring his arrest and indictment on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. Despite all these accusations and the malediction of his victims, the young wife is answering in her affection, and still affirms that his character is none reproach, and their mutual love unabated. Yesterday morning she visited him in his cell, where she remained with him for an hour, and at his departure told Mrs. WARD, the Jail Warden's wife, that she was prepared to share his fate, even if the poorhouse were the stern alternative. According to the statement of a prominent clergyman in Elizabeth, the Count presented a letter of introduction to Rev. Dr. MILLER, from a Bishop of the Episcopal church in Europe. The letter was nicely sealed, and, as the "Count" thought, contained a favorable recommendation, but it seems that while it came from a distinguished minister it was written by him from his knowledge of the Count while residing in a private in Europe. The Bishop, it is stated, is ignorant of the fact that his letter was used for such purposes, but until a few days ago was not aware that the "Count" and the alleged European culprit were identical. Dr. MILLER states that at the time of his marriage he actually stated that his mother was a cousin of Count BISMARCK, and that his father, who died after of Elizabeth, was another creditor to the amount of $700, and that at the time of his arrest he was negotiating a loan with a Wall-street broker named R. V. DUMOUCH. He will be arraigned before the Court of Special Sessions on Monday, when all the witnesses are expected to be present.

BROOKLYN.

Miss COOPER, an elderly maiden lady, residing with her brother, Dr. COOPER, on Stuyvesant-avenue, was burned to death Monday evening under the following circumstances: She had been an invalid for some years, and had an attendant almost constantly with her. Monday evening, during the temporary absence of the servant, a spark blew from the grate on to Miss COOPER'S dress, igniting it. In a moment she was enveloped in flames, and, before assistance could be rendered, was so severely burned that death resulted at 5 o'clock yesterday morning. An inquest will be held.

LONG ISLAND.

The Beuron farm of Whitestone has been purchased by Messrs. J. J. LOCKE, CONRAD PERPENHEIMER, E. B. HINSDALE and HENRY HURD, together with an additional tract adjoining, for $60,000. It is reported to the purchasers to lay out a portion of the farm in building lots, and to open a new street from Flushing-avenue, through the farm, to the Sound, a distance of about 1 mile, and to build a hotel on the Sound, to be called the Beuron House.

WILLIAM, on looking into the room and seeing his brother staggering in his blood, went up into the attic and procured a bottle of carbolic acid (which had been found on hand for killing vermin) by swallowing the poison. He then came down stairs, entered his own house, fired two shots, and finally threw himself on his bed, moaning and groaning, and calling to his brother: "O, come and speak to me before I die!" The wretched man lay in this condition until about 4 o'clock this morning, when he died alone.

Dr. HARTLEY was called to THOMAS but he found nothing beyond self-inflicted wounds, the unfortunate man was beyond the reach of any earthly aid. Both parties were Englishmen, WILLIAM was a spinner in the Robbs Mill, and THOMAS was a second hand in the mule room of the new Union. The latter is said to have been a very likely, sober, industrious and worthy man. The two children which he leaves are a boy about 4 years of age and a babe of 12 months.
